Cohasset loses a true friend

Community remembers Ed Lappen

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

"I considered him my very special friend, but it's apparent he was a lot of people's very special friend. He could really connect with people and enjoyed people so much."
— Steve Etkind

Husband, father, neighbor, volunteer, mentor and leader — Ed Lappen played many roles in the Cohasset community.

Yet what all those roles might come down to is one word: friend. Lappen brought energy, generosity, compassion and kindness to everything he did. He was a true family man who believed in leading a balanced life.

Those who knew him are still coming to terms with the news of Lappen's death at 60 last week due to a carbon monoxide leak at his ski chalet in Vermont. As a testament to the life he led, hundreds turned out for his funeral at the Congregation Sha'aray Shalom in Hingham this past Sunday.

Across all segments of his Cohasset life, Lappen had an innate ability to connect with people of all walks of life and to bring them together.

"I have always struggled to describe my dad since outgoing, personable, extroverted, and social are all too big of an understatement," his son Ross Lieb-Lappen said. "When he walked into a room, there was a silence as everyone was drawn by his presence and conversation."

Who is the town's top citizen?

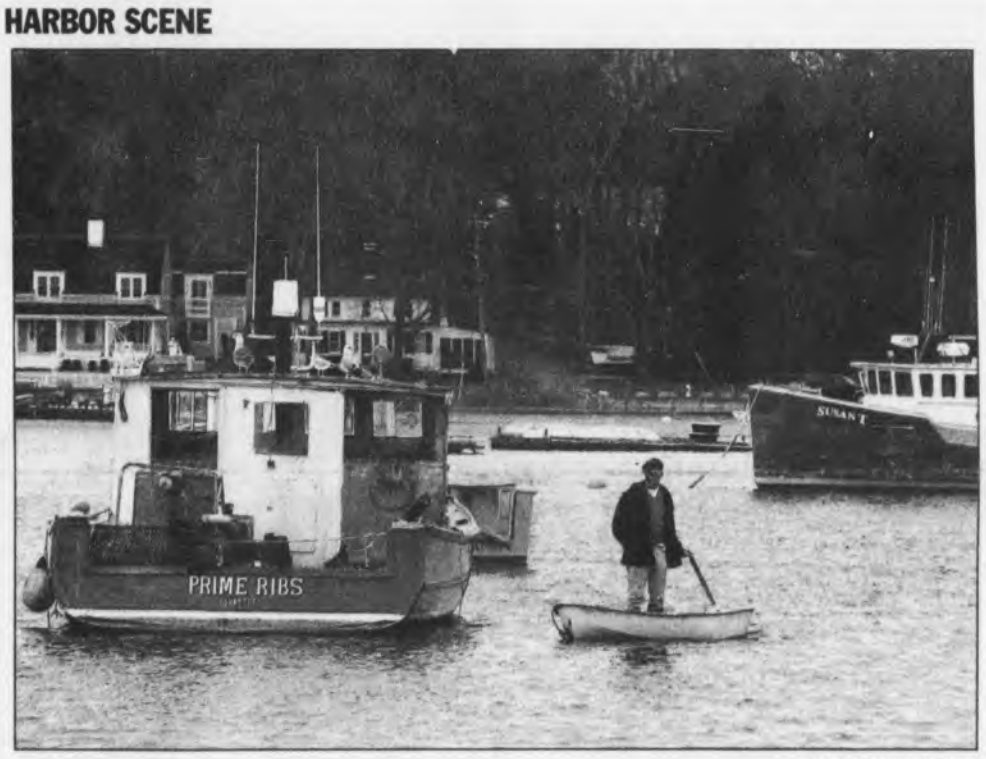
By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

In keeping with an 18-year tradition recognizing an individual for outstanding service to the community or a special achievement — the Cohasset Mariner is now accepting nominations for the annual Citizen of the Year Award.

Here at the Mariner, we invite our readers to take this opportunity to nominate a person who has made a significant contribution to Cohasset. This is a community award: the Mariner is the means by which we are able to recognize, thank and honor those around us who make the quiet, generous contributions that make our town a wonderful place to call home.

Here at the Mariner, we invite our readers to take this opportunity to nominate a person who has made a significant contribution to Cohasset.



Last year, Cohasset Mariner readers honored Dick Avery as Citizen of the Year, in recognition of his numerous community service activities including serving on town boards, as chairman of non-profit organizations, helping the Boy Scouts, and even picking up trash around town on his morning runs around town.

The deadline for nominations for the Citizen of the Year is 5 p.m. Monday, Feb. 21. Please see the nomination form on page 4. The form may be photocopied. Letters of nomination are also accepted and should be mailed or sent by fax to The Cohasset Mariner, 73 South St., Hingham 02043. Our fax number is 781-741-2931. Letters of nomination by email to mford@cnc.com are also welcome.

This is not a popularity contest. Following the close of nominations, a selection panel — after reviewing the names submitted by poring over the nomination letters and comments — will select the Citizen of the Year.

Nee to assume top veterans post

Replacing Kelley on acting basis

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Coleman Nee of Short Street is set to be the acting Secretary of Veterans' Services.

On January 21, he will succeed current secretary and Medal of Honor winner Thomas Kelley in the role.

While in the Marine reserves, Nee was activated for Operation Desert Storm and served with the 2nd Marine Division in Saudi Arabia and Kuwait. He has served as the undersecretary of veterans' services for the past 3-1/2 years.

Nee's interim appointment is not without controversy as Kelley, who has been in the position for 11 years across the terms of four governors, was forced to resign.

When reached in his office on Tuesday, Nee said the interim appointment was "bittersweet."

"I've appreciated working with (Kelley) and the service he has provided to the Commonwealth," Nee said.

He acknowledged there were big challenges ahead for the state department.

"We need to look at the whole department, evaluate every program, maximize efficiency to provide the best benefits to our veterans and their families. I want this department to go the extra mile to improve the services we provide," Nee said.

Cohasset Mariner 'drop box'

The Cohasset Mariner has a "drop box" and pickup location at Tedeschi's in the village. The drop box is on the counter in the front window around the corner to the left after you enter the front door.

The Mariner picks up at 8 a.m. on Mondays and Tuesdays. The drop box can be used to drop off glossy photographs, letters, flyers or other editorial copy.

Christmas tree drop-offs

The Cohasset DPW would like to remind residents that they may drop off Christmas trees only in the designated area of the DPW parking lot. Make sure that all decorations and wires are removed as they may cause expensive damage to the town's chipper. At this time, the DPW are not taking brush or any other wood at this time.

Winter update for DPW

Cohasset DPW reminds residents that a sand and salt mixture is available in the upper corner of the town parking lot.

When snow is forecast, residents are asked to not park on streets plowed by the town to expedite snow removal. Vehicles that obstruct snow removal operations will be towed at the owners expense. Residents and contractors are reminded not to move snow, ice or water onto roadways that may impede traffic.

The town is not responsible for damage to mailboxes, driveway aprons, walkways, stone walls, grassed areas, shrubs, trees or fences that fall within the town layout.

Improving on storm response

Emergency plans to be tweaked

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

One of the key issues was to identify ways to improve communication within the emergency response team and between the emergency response team and the larger community.

The post-Christmas blizzard hit Cohasset and the South Shore in a big way. Now, nearly two weeks removed from the storm, town officials are analyzing the storm's events and developing ways to improve their emergency response plans.

Fire Chief Bob Silvia said the fire department was responding to calls with every piece of equipment for close to 24 hours during the height of the storm. Problems with National Grid response time, downed wires and subsequent power outages were the major issues of the day (Monday, Dec. 26).

Emergency management director Glenn Pratt said the storm prompted the opening of an emergency shelter at the Deer Hill School for the first time in two decades.

"It was nice to see a plan come out of a piece of paper we've been talking about for 10 years," Pratt said.

That being said the town officials, including Silvia, Pratt, Police Chief Mark DeLuca and Elder Affairs Director Coral Grande, among others, identified several areas where improvements in the plan could be made.

One of the key issues was to identify ways to improve communication within the emergency response team and between the emergency response team and the larger community.

Over the course of the storm three Connect-CTY mass phone calls went out to the community. However, those without power and landline phone service were not able to receive them. Officials encouraged people in town to register their cell phone for Connect-CTY messages on the town website (www.townofcohasset.org).

Although communication between town departments (Elder Affairs, Board of Health, Public Health Nurse) was strong, each department had their own list of vulnerable residents. The town is now working on creating a master list of names, addresses, and phone numbers to use in the event of an emergency (see sidebar).

Pratt said cell phone use at the Deer Hill shelter was nearly impossible and a plan had to be developed to maximize the use of available landlines.

Having a group of trained emergency response volunteers was also identified as a priority going forward.

Elder Affairs director Coral Grande said more education about emergency response in the community might help the town as a whole. A program is being developed for seniors to help them understand what to bring to a shelter, when to go to a shelter and what a shelter looks like.

"It will go a long way to take the mystery of it away," Grande said.

Other efforts like creating a refrigerator magnet with emergency numbers on it and a way for residents to solicit help from public safety officials without the use of phones were discussed.

"(Overall) I appreciate how all the departments worked together, communicated and shared information," Grande said. "We have a lot of work to do ahead of time."

Pratt also said something the town might consider is installing a generator at the Harborview Apartments (60 Elm St.) where more than 70 senior citizens live.

"There's a large group there were would have to accommodate if they were without power for a extended period of time," Pratt said.

Want to be checked on?

In the event of another severe storm event, would you like to be checked on by public safety officials? The town is compiling a list of residents who may live alone, may be frail or disabled, or otherwise need assistance during an emergency. If you were not contacted during the most recent storm, but would like to be in the future contact the Elder Affairs office at 781-383-9112.

Cohasset social host law case resolved

A judge has resolved the case against a Cohasset woman charged with allowing a teen drinking party at her home by continuing it without a finding.

Elizabeth P. McQuade, 51, was charged under the state's social host law that makes it illegal to knowingly or intentionally give alcohol to minors, or to allow minors to drink in a home.

McQuade admitted in Quincy District Court on Dec. 13, that there were sufficient facts to find her guilty of violating the law. Judge Mary Orfanello continued the case without a finding for a year. If McQuade stays out of trouble until then, the charge will probably be dismissed.

Police arrested McQuade and her son Taylor R. McQuade, 18, the night of July 31, after a neighbor complained of noise coming from her home on Deep Run.

The son, who faced the same charge, was placed on pretrial probation until March 1 by Quincy District Court Judge Kevin O'Dea in August. Charges are usually dropped if a person stays out of trouble while on pretrial probation.

Police alleged that the mother and son allowed 23 teenagers ranging in age from 17 to 19 to drink in their home. A police report on file at the court said officers found teens seated around a table drinking from plastic cups, and that the yard was littered with beer cans.

As an officer questioned the teens, Elizabeth McQuade walked onto a deck and said she had been at a friend's house all night and had just returned home, the report says.

When asked, two teenagers told officers that Elizabeth McQuade had been home for 45 minutes and knew they were drinking, the police report states.

Teen charged with motor vehicle theft

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

A 19-year-old Scituate man brought to the police station last Thursday (Dec. 30) by his parents to face the charge of motor vehicle theft ran off into the woods when he realized he was going to be arrested, police said. Police called the Scituate K-9 unit to the scene and the dog located the teen hiding in the bushes near St. Stephen's Church.

Police said the teen is being charged with the theft of a 1995 Ford dump truck from a Route 3A business in Cohasset back on Dec. 13. Police said the teen worked at the business several summers ago.

The teen became the suspect in the motor vehicle theft after Connecticut State Police stopped him driving the truck the day before it was reported stolen. The truck is still missing, police said.

Missing dog

At 9:30 a.m. Monday (Dec. 27), in the height of last week's storm, a cell caller from Sohier Street called to report her dog was missing. Police said earlier an officer found the dog and gave it to a tow truck driver who brought it to the Scituate Animal Shelter. The owner was advised where to find her dog, police said.

• At 1:10 p.m. on Monday (Dec. 27), a 2010 post office delivery truck was rear-ended by a 1996 Ford pickup truck, operated by a 58-year-old Weymouth man, on Beechwood Street by Hillside Drive. Police said the mail truck, operated by a 42-year-old Pembroke man, was on the side of the road when the weather-related accident occurred. Neither vehicle was towed but the letter carrier was transported to the hospital with non-life-threatening injuries, police said. The other driver was not cited in the accident.

• At 12:58 p.m. on Tuesday (Dec. 28), a 49-year-old Everett woman was operating a 2001 Honda westbound on Chief Justice Cushing Highway (3A) when she rear-ended a 2004 BMW, operated by an 18-year-old Scituate man, that had slowed down. The Honda was towed; there were no reported injuries. The Everett woman had a Brazilian passport but no license. She is being summonsed to court for unlicensed operation, police said.

• At 6:58 p.m. on Thursday (Dec. 30), police responded to a three-car accident at Chief Justice Cushing Highway (3A) and Pond Street. Police said a 2005 Lincoln Aviator, operated by a 44-year-old Scituate woman, had stopped on 3A at the lights and so had the 1997 Toyota Avalon, operated by a 31-year-old Hull man, behind her. The third car in the line, a 2005 Honda Civic, operated by an 18-year-old Hull woman, slid into the Toyota, causing a chain reaction. The Honda had to be towed. There were no reported injuries. The 18-year-old was cited for failure to use caution, police said.

• At 9:11 p.m., on Friday (Dec. 31) there was an accident near the Mobil Mart at King and Sohier streets. Police said a 19-year-old Cohasset woman operating a 2000 Pontiac Grand Am pulled out onto Route 3A to head south in the path of a northbound 2003 Kia Rio, operated by a 38-year-old Hull man, causing a collision. Police said it was a low-speed accident. There were no injuries and neither vehicle had to be towed. The 19-year-old was cited for failure to yield, police said.

• A 65-year-old Cohasset man reported at 10:06 a.m. on Sunday (Jan. 2) that his 2004 Lexus SUV was backed into at the RTF by a 1994 Dodge pickup truck that left. He provided the plate number. Police contacted the owner of the pickup, a 75-year-old Cohasset man, who did not realize he had backed into the Lexus. Police said the two men exchanged information and that the accident was apparently inadvertent.

Annoying calls

Police advised a 39-year-old Cohasset man last week to notify Verizon about the annoying hang-up calls he had been receiving. No number had come up on the caller ID. Police said Verizon would be able to track the calls.

Missing child

While police were responding to a house last Wednesday where the frantic mother had called to report her 2-1/2 year old was missing – the mother located the child sleeping on the floor under some clothing.

Car egged

A 51-year-old Cohasset woman reported last Wednesday (Dec. 29) that her 2009 Subaru Forrester had been egged in the driveway. She cleaned the eggs off and there appeared to be no permanent damage, police said. There are no suspects at this time.

Cat trapped

Police said a large house cat had somehow gotten its paw trapped in a small space between the garage door and the garage at a house on Hillside Drive last Wednesday (Dec. 29). The responding officer called the Animal Control Officer who contacted a local veterinarian from Crazy Paws. The veterinarian sedated the frantic feline so they could release its paw. The cat had scratched its claws down, drawing blood in its effort to escape, police said.

Warrant arrest

An officer on patrol last Thursday (Dec. 30) recognized a 47-year-old Scituate man who was wanted on a warrant walking along Country Way near the Cohasset line. He was arrested on the default warrant for credit card offenses out of Quincy District Court, police said.

Road rage

Police spoke to a 21-year-old Scituate man who had apparently been making gestures and yelling at a Cohasset woman who was not traveling fast enough for him last Thursday along North Main Street.. She pulled over and called police. An officer had a conversation with the male motorist to warn him to cease that kind of behavior.

Suspicious truck

Police responded to a report from a concerned caller at about 9:18 p.m. on Thursday (Dec. 30) that a truck outside Smith Appliance on King Street (3A) did not look like a Smith truck. As it turned out, the 1993 Dodge Dakota pickup truck, operated by a 35-year-old Boston man with a 25-year-old Chelsea passenger, was coming from a scrap metal job in another town and the load had shifted while they were traveling. They had pulled over to reposition the load. Police made sure nothing they had belonged to Smith.

For Michele, one of the greatest advances in cancer care has been the one on the South Shore.

When Michele needed treatment for breast cancer, she was thankful that she could receive world-renowned care at Dana-Farber/Brigham and Women's Cancer Center in clinical affiliation with South Shore Hospital. And she had confidence knowing that our specialists, focused on cancer, were providing the expert care she needed. But she also found something more: how important it was to be treated in a place that not only cared for her cancer, but also for her life.

"It's a place filled with hope," said Michele. And having all the integrated services she needed close to home helped her maintain a sense of normalcy through her treatments. "With two small kids, I don't know how I would have managed otherwise," she explained. "Having this level of cancer care on the South Shore — it means everything to me."

Police Beat

Protective custody

Police took an uncooperative, intoxicated 21-year-old Cohasset man into protective custody at 2:03 a.m. on Jan. 1 on Old Pasture Road. An officer noticed a group of young adults drive by when they crossed over the double yellow line. But when the officer caught up to the car, the seven occupants (college students) who, police say, had been drinking, were outside and the keys were out of the ignition, so the officer could not determine who was driving. The parents of the young adults were notified. One of the parents removed the car. The member of the group who refused to comply with police instructions was taken into protective custody.

Medical device

A 71-year-old Hull man reported last Saturday (Jan. 1) that someone had stolen his CPAP (sleep apnea) device valued at $2,500 from his 1994 Chrysler LeBaron that was on the front passenger seat. Also missing was a bottle of Mount Gay Rum. The car was parked outside Curtis Liquors, police said.

Tax bills to be delayed

Residents can voluntarily pay taxes

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The clock does not start ticking on any penalties for non-payment of tax bills until the actual bill is issued.

If you've been checking the mail looking for your third quarter tax bill you can breathe a sigh of relief. While the tax bills typically go out shortly after New Year's, this year's bills will be delayed and possibly for several months.

At Monday night's Selectmen's meeting Deputy Assessor Mary Quill said the delay is due to the pending water department audit.

"The fiscal year 2011 property assessments have been certified by the Department of Revenue; however, the Town of Cohasset cannot set a tax rate without a balanced budget," Quill said. With the outstanding questions raised during the audit process, which may result in the town facing a current year deficit, there is uncertainty that the fiscal 2011 budget is balanced.

It's likely the third and fourth quarter tax bills will be issued together, Quill said. The fourth quarter tax bills are issued in March.

Treasurer/Collector Linda Litchfield said in the coming months, until the bills are issued, her office will accept voluntary tax payments from property owners. Taxpayers who would like to make payment may do so by duplicating the amount of the second quarter payment that was due Nov. 1, 2010. The new valuations are available on the town's website. The fiscal 2010 tax rate was $11.22 per thousand dollars of assessment. Any voluntary tax payment will appear on the tax bill when it is issued.

Appeals of tax bills cannot be filed with the Assessors' Office until the third quarter actual tax bill is issued. The statutory exemptions and tax deferral will be applied to the third quarter actual tax bill when it is issued.

The sewer betterment and drainage betterment will be issued as part of the third and fourth quarter tax bills.

The clock does not start ticking on any penalties for non-payment of tax bills until the actual bill is issued. Once issued, the tax bills will be due May 2 or 30 days after the bills are issued, whichever is later. If the bills go out any time before April 1st they will be due May 2. If the bills go out after April 1st they will be due in 30 days from the issue date.

In the meantime, interim Town Manager Steve Lombard said, the town does face a cash flow issue and will be seeking revenue anticipation notes based on the expected revenue from property taxes to ensure the town can pay its financial obligations.

"We'll have to borrow and we'll be coming before the Selectmen soon to have you sign off," Lombard said.

Once the audit is complete (a draft finding report is anticipated on January 15) and assuming there is a finding for a deficit the town will need to identify funds from the available revenues to cover the deficit. A special Town Meeting may need to be called to appropriate the revenue and balance the fiscal 2011 budget, Lombard said.

Selectman Leland Jenkins said he planned to pay his taxes voluntarily and on time, despite the delay in issuance of tax bills.

"I encourage others to do the same and pay their bills at last year's rate. It's very important people in town still pay their tax bills," Jenkins said.

To find out the assessed value of your property for the new year, visit the Town of Cohasset website, www.townofcohasset.org, under forms and documents.

tions and government affairs. He also became active again in Democratic campaigns of all levels. He has been active in the Cohasset Democratic Town Committee for many years and was named Democrat of the Year by the committee in 2008.

Some Massachusetts veterans are upset with the forced resignation of Kelley and planned to stage a protest at Governor Deval Patrick's inauguration ceremony Thursday morning (Jan. 6) after the Mariner went to press.

Kelley was appointed Commissioner of the Massachusetts Department of Veterans Services in 1999 where he oversees programs for the half million Massachusetts veterans and their dependents. The position was upgraded to Secretary of Veterans' Services in 2003.

Although Nee has a new title, he said he still considers himself as one of more than a 1000 people statewide who help veterans day in and day out.

"The Department of Veterans' Services job is to make sure we have a coordinated team and we are moving toward one mission of helping veterans get the benefits they deserve," Nee said.

Interestingly, both Nee and Kelley have been the keynote speakers at Cohasset's Memorial Day observances. Nee spoke in 2009 and Kelley spoke in 2010.

Joe McElroy, Cohasset's veterans agent, said he respected Kelley and what he had done within the department.

"As a fellow Vietnam veteran I have the greatest respect for Tom Kelley. He is one of only two Massachusetts residents who is a recipient of the Medal of Honor," said McElroy. "His entire life has been one of public service...and his tenure as secretary of veterans' services brought major improvement to the programs and services provided to help our most vulnerable veterans and spouses."

McElroy said he wished Kelley well.

At the same time McElroy has developed a very good working relationship with his fellow Cohasset resident, Nee, over the past few years and looked forward to working with him.

"He is ideally suited to assume the responsibilities of Secretary Kelley. I know he has been appointed on an interim basis but I hope he is appointed to the secretary's position permanently."

The Department of Veteran Services serves and advocates for more than 400,000 veterans and their families, helping them attain the services and benefits they have earned through their service.

I want to end this weeks column by thanking all of the people, businesses, DPW and safety workers, police and fire along with the many others who did the job that was needed to keep Cohasset and surrounding towns safe during the Blizzard. To know that our neighboring town of Scituate, who lost two homes to fire, had the devastating flooding as did others, were safe and unharmed physically but emotionally needed so much in terms of support, homes to live in, clothing and supplies were taken care of by so many was exactly what communities and friends are for. A lot is needed to clean up and rebuild but with the love, compassion and support of so many, it will be done.

That is the news for this week. Make sure to send in the news no later than 5 pm on Tuesdays. EMAIL: aroundtowncohasset@yahoo.com

Quick to smile and with an infectious laugh, Lappen had the ability to make everyone feel comfortable. Ross described him as the "rock" that held family and friends together.

"Ed radiated positive energy. He was always full of good words and positive advice," said Howie Altholtz, who has been friends of the Lieb-Lappens since he moved to town.

"He was full of life and love and hope. He left you with the feeling it all could be worked out," Altholtz said. He used the Yiddish word – mench – to describe him. The word means "a person of integrity and honor."

"He was positive, compassionate, completely dedicated to his family and he is an example we all can learn from," he said. "The love and energy he had touched everyone and that's what will live on."

Long-time friend and former college roommate Steve Etkind said he could always count on Lappen's friendship in spite of the changes in each of their lives.

"I considered him my very special friend, but it's apparent he was a lot of people's very special friend. He could really connect with people and enjoyed people so much," Etkind said.

Part of Lappen's charm came from his ability to be a bit of goofball.

"He just had fun kidding around. He has a real gift for being able to do that," Etkind said.

Lappen was the chief executive officer of his family business, Lappen Auto Supply Inc., a Quincy-based company that owned 19 discount auto parts stores in the Boston area before he sold the company to Advance Auto Parts in 2005. Working less after the sale of the company, he took on more volunteer roles and community service.

Lappen served on the Advisory Committee, Budget Planning Group and Water Planning Group where he was well respected and well liked by his peers.

"He was so smart, he saw the big picture and he didn't get bogged down in the details. He had the right perspective…(and) when he said something you listened," said Selectmen Chair Karen Quigley.

Sam Wakeman, who worked with Lappen on several committees, described Lappen as a "straight shooter."

"He was committed. When he said he was going to do something, he followed through," Wakeman said. "It's a significant loss to the Advisory Committee and the town. You don't see many people with his kind of dedication very often."

In his role as Appalachia Service Project (ASP) group leader, something he did for eight years, he was able to connect with the kids and the Appalachia community.

"He had strong persuasion skills. He could persuade lots of people to do lots of things," said John Chapman, a friend and fellow ASP leader. He recalled a time when he enlisted a local foreman at a small saw mill to come and chain saw railroad ties.

Advisory Committee member Ed Lappen, center, applauds as Merle Brown is recognized for his service on the Advisory Committee by chairman Sam Wakeman during last March's annual Town Meeting.

"He would go out and work the community and find the resources he needed," Chapman said.

Several people interviewed said they were struck, yet not surprised, by how many young people were heartbroken by Lappen's passing. Ross said he and his sister, Mia, were not the only ones to call Lappen "dad."

"He was able to connect with the younger generation in a way where the kids always felt special," said Etkind. "Everyone, young and old, felt they had a personal connection with Ed."

"He had the ability to reach out and touch you and make you feel like you were his very best friend," Quigley said.

Even in disagreement with others, Chapman said, he found a way to say his piece without making others feel bad.

"He had a way of saying (his opinion) with a smile on his face and in a way that would not take the smile off someone else's face," Chapman said. "He could tease and take teasing and it was all very good-natured."

Kevin McCarthy, Democratic Town Committee chair, said he could count on Lappen to help the committee reach a compromise.

"Ed's voice was always one of kindness and reason," McCarthy said. "When various views conflicted it was always Ed who proposed a reasonable compromise that everyone could agree upon. Sometimes it was simply his undoubted integrity and compassion that would carry the day."

At the center of Lappen's life was his family. His wife, Helene, and two children, Ross and Mia, were his focus and true loves. They have lived in Cohasset for 29 years.

Ross said he hoped to emulate his dad and the way he put his family and marriage first.

"In 29 years of marriage, not once did my dad and mom not go out on Saturday night. No one can deny that Mia and I were the center of their universe. However, not once did they invite us. They are excellent role models to everyone of how to balance raising children and loving each other," Ross said.

On Wednesday night, Lappen's wife Helene Lieb was present at School Committee in her role as chair. She began the meeting with a statement expressing appreciation for the outpouring of support she received over the last week.

"I am never going to live any where else. I'm never leaving Cohasset. I'm going to continue to serve the community – and do double time for me and for Eddie, who will always be in my heart," Lieb said. She asked the board to do their business that night in honor of her husband.

Friend Ken Ingber captured and summed up what many in the community are feeling.

"When you hear from others something about Eddie that seems hyperbolic or generous exaggeration, it is not. He really was that good a husband and that good a father and that good a son. And he really was that good a friend, to me and my family and to so many other people it just does not seem possible. But I promise you it is."

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Thanks for speaking up

Before 2011 gets too far along, we still have some important 2010 business to attend to.

Some of the following names may be familiar to you, others may not be. But the people attached to these names all have one thing in common: they wrote at least one letter-to-the-editor or penned a commentary to the Cohasset Mariner in 2010.

A few wrote thank you notes to the people of Cohasset or organizations for their help or support; others complained about a decision or lobbied to have their views considered; while still others educated us about programs, problems or activities.

But no matter what the subject, putting pen to paper to share your views with your fellow citizens is important. The First Amendment is close to our hearts here in the newspaper business and at no time do we appreciate it more than when ordinary citizens, like those listed here, take advantage of their Freedom of Speech. And what better vehicle is there than your local paper?

So here at the Mariner, we salute the following citizens:

Maribeth Ahern (for the CHS Hall of Fame Committee), Chris Allen, Howie Altholz, The Arnold Family, Jeanne Astino, D'Anne Avotins (PSO), Corey Axelson (and Anne Czerkawski, Patti Livingstone, Diane McNary, Carole Meers , Susan Meikleham, Bridget O'Brien, Barbara O'Neil, Lorraine Tarpey), Carol Barrett, Dana Bean, John Beck, Diane Benson, Emily Bertovich, Prof. Lincoln P. The editorial pages of the Cohasset Mariner belong to you. It's where you can speak out or just say thank you to a citizen or group that went beyond the call of duty.

Sometimes it takes a good dose of courage to let your voice be heard, but we think it's worth it. Often one voice is all the inspiration needed to propel others to action.

Last year, the Cohasset Mariner received 158 letters from 130 different people, groups or organizations.

To those of you that have thought about writing and haven't, please reconsider. To those whom we hear from on a regular basis, keep writing!

There are lots of weeks to go in the New Year — which will be filled with events, decisions, happenings and controversy. Let us hear what you think in 2011.

(Editor's note: Unless they penned a letter, names of the Mariner's regular columnists were not included in this list).

HEALTH NOTES

Don't let the bedbugs bite!

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Rock a bye bedbugs; again in the news! It seems the pesky critters have received national attention. Attacking the problem, several Federal agencies participate in a Federal Bed Bug Work Group: the Environmental Protection Agency, the departments of Housing and Urban Development, Agriculture, Defense and Commerce, the National Institutes of Health and the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. So, in the meantime, until they eradicate the problem for us, it'll be necessary to use our own devices to cope with it.

Small wingless insects that feed solely upon warm-blooded animals, bed bugs and their relatives have evolved as nest parasites. Certain kinds inhabit bird nests; others have adapted well to living in the homes of people. About the size of a comma and adults are about the size of the word bug. Color ranges from nearly light tan to a deep brown. The host's blood may appear as a dark red or black mass within the bug's body. Bed bugs cannot fly. When disturbed they seek shelter in cracks and crevices. Inspect carefully for live crawling bed bugs. They seek out people and animals, generally at night while the hosts are asleep, and painlessly sip a few drops of blood but they are not known to transmit any infectious agents.

Prevalence — Relatively scarce at home in the 20th century, their populations have resurged in recent years, particularly throughout parts of North America, Europe, and Australia. Most abundant in bedrooms they generally hide nearest the bed and most active in the middle of the night, but when hungry, they will venture out during the day to seek a host. Their flattened bodies allow them to conceal themselves in cracks and crevices around the room and within furniture. Favored hiding sites include the bed frame, mattress and box spring. Clutter around the room offers additional sites to hide, and increases the difficulty in eliminating them once they have become established.

How do bed bugs invade a home? Because bed bugs readily hide in small crevices, they may accompany (as stowaways) luggage, furniture, clothing, pillows, boxes, and other such objects when these are moved between apartments, homes and hotels. Used furniture, particularly bed frames and mattresses, are at greatest risk of harboring bed bugs and their eggs. Thus, one should carefully scrutinize and consider the history of any used furniture, particularly 'street' items so plentiful at the beginning and end of each academic year. Because they readily survive for many months without feeding, bed bugs may already be present in apparently 'vacant' and 'clean' apartments. Bed bugs can wander between adjoining apartments through voids in walls and holes though which wires and pipes pass. In a few cases, bats and/or birds may introduce and maintain bed bugs and their close relatives (bat bugs and bird bugs). Pest control personnel should be mindful of the presence of blood feeding insects and mites that may be left behind after removing nests or roosts of birds and bats in and on the home.

What should you do if you find bed bugs? Several insects resemble bed bugs, specimens should be carefully compared with good reference images to confirm their identity. Once confirmed, a plan should be devised to eliminate the bed bugs. Don't discard furniture and don't treat until and unless you have a plan.

Upon Finding the Critters: hire a licensed pest control operator to confirm the infestation; then request a written integrated pest management (IPM) plan detailing the methods and insecticides to be used. Don't dispose of useful furniture. Improper disposal may simply help spread bed bugs. Officials in some municipalities affix a label to infested furniture to warn of bed bugs.

Can you have specimens examined? Specimens suspected of being bed bugs may be collected into plastic pill bottle or a zip-lock plastic bag and sent to an expert for definitive identification.

Travelers increasingly encounter bed bugs in stays away from home. If suspected, consider laundering all clothing before the items are brought back into the home. Suitcases should be carefully inspected, scrubbed with a stiff brush, and thoroughly vacuumed. Leaving such luggage for several hours in a closed vehicle in full summer sun may also render the items bug free.

What would be your first edict in 2011?

Editor's note: Members of the Readers Advisory Network were asked: "If you were czar (or czarina) of Cohasset, what would be your first edict in 2011?" The last time we posed this question was in 2006.

Hug a Veteran.

— Joe McElroy

The off-the-charts water/sewer bills are both outrageous and unsustainable. The Czar immediately forms a blue ribbon emergency panel to propose solutions, however off the wall, using the boldness of the federal deficit panel as a model.

— Linc Bloomfield

I'd put a bike path and/or sidewalk in between the train station and the village! Happy New Year, Cohasset!

The Rev. Margot Critchfield, St. Stephen's Church

There shall be an end to all State and Federal income taxes for Cohasset residents and that responsibility shall be transferred to the Town of Cohasset. The Town shall pay taxes only for State and Federal services it elects to use. The money used to pay Cohasset's taxes shall be collected from residents of the Town. The Town shall collect the money needed to for services whether obtained from the State or Federal government or from the private sector in addition to payments for the Town border security that would be needed to prevent being overrun by millions of people who would want to move to Cohasset.

Your friendly Czar.

— Louis S. Harvey

Get a complete and transparent Financial Reporting System up and running. Have it accessible on the Town web site.

— Sam Wakeman

If I were czar, I would immediately change the Cohasset High School mascot's name from the Skippers to the Mariners or any other nautical reference. The mere mention of the word "Skipper" to me generates flashbacks of being playfully terrorized as a very young boy by my older sister, Mary Beth, and her weapon of fear....Barbie's little sister SKIPPER!!!!!! The phobia borders on post-traumatic stress!

Happy New Year,

— Mike Kearney

I would award Kathy O'Malley, the President of the Cohasset Historical Society, a diamond pendant for her great work in making the Historical Society and the wonderful rehab of the old library into the center of Cohasset culture. All the members are especially grateful for her sharing her personal warmth and personality with everyone who visits. As the Czar I would help the historical society by having everyone in town join the organization and give what they can this year to support all of Kathy's efforts.

— Phil Smith

The blasting or other removal of ledges shall cease forthwith and forever.

— Czar John and Czarina Mary (Hartshorne)

Unfortunately from my observations, things have not changed for the better in Cohasset over the last 5 years. Those in power have relied on the paid professionals and abdicated their responsibilities of minding the store even in the simplest act of following the town bylaws to demand and look at month to date reports of all income and expenses, including enterprise funds, from all town boards and departments. These inactions have brought us to our knees today. Consequently, as I wrote 5 years ago — "If I were Czar of Cohasset, I would have a thorough audit and cost analysis of all town and school departments, programs and buildings conducted and immediately implement corrections where needed in order to free up monies for priority areas" — still would be my first act immediately followed up by opening all contracts and renegotiating health care. With a $70 million debt and $10 million in unfunded pensions and benefits, a responsible town can no longer maintain a $5 CoPay employee health care plan paying 71 percent of the premium.

— Leonora Jenkins

— Donna Hanlon

I would ask the MBTA to put on a late-night train, so that local residents can enjoy entertainment in Boston without having to drive in, just like everyone else can on the other commuter rail lines.

— Dave Clinton

The Cohasset Mariner is building a Readers Advisory Network of e-mail addresses so we can more frequently involve our readers in the content of the newspaper.

Readers, who join the network, may be asked for reactions to stories, ideas for stories or follow-ups, for a digital "person on the street" interview, or for a community commentary.

If you are interested in becoming a member of the network, email Mary Ford at mford@cnc.com. She will answer any questions that you may have. The Mariner promises to remove you immediately from the Readers Advisory Network if you request that we do.

Set realistic goals for the New Year

LIVING WELL

JOAN F. WRIGHT, CMC

Editor's note: Living Well is a monthly column provided by Joan F. Wright on behalf of the NVNA & Hospice. The monthly subjects of the column will coincide with National Health Observances as outlined by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. The column appears the first week of each month.

Has your New Year's resolution already been defeated? Most of us shoot for the sky with our resolutions to lose weight, exercise more, work less, have more family time, eat healthy and drink less. But usually in short time, we've either broken or forgotten them because "life" gets in our way. The real problem with resolutions is that we're not realistic when we make them. We know what our immediate wants are but do we consider the reality of our environment, our own physical and/or emotional limitations and the true potential for success when we set these goals for ourselves?

We live in a world of "immediate returns". Technology connects us where we want when we want. But not for everything! We may want to lose weight or get in better shape but a quick text message to self isn't going to do the trick. So consider real time when making a resolution. Don't let your eagerness to get to the finish line quickly derail or discourage you and thus miss it altogether.

One tip in setting healthy resolutions is to visualize a road map that has what we want to change or improve as the goal at the end. Then, fill in all the obstacles we know might prevent us from getting to that goal. Thoughtfully consider and color in other obstacles that may pop up unexpectedly to derail us. Now look at that road map and see what we need to adjust, adapt, add or refine to make our resolution more realistic.

One tip in setting healthy resolutions is to visualize a road map that has what we want to change or improve as the goal at the end.

Perhaps a more realistic resolution than "lose 20 pounds" is "manage my health and lifestyle better." Setting realistic objectives and destination points along the journey offers a greater chance for success. For example, if swings through the fast food drive-through are part of your daily routine, try to skip that practice one day a week, then two days, then three, etc. Try whole grain breads and pastas instead of white; trade in the Trix for a whole grain cereal or ones with less sugar; switch from whole milk to skim in coffee or tea. Read food labels and reduce consumption of foods with high fructose corn syrup and transfats. Develop a healthy pace towards eating better.

If exercise has never been part of your lifestyle, don't think suddenly joining a gym will be successful. (Trust me on this one!) Take baby steps towards exercise by taking a 10-minute walk three times a week, then every day, then increasing to 30- minute walks. In time, that gym membership will become a more realistic reality for you. Or just walking may fulfill your need for exercise. Cashing in the golf cart to walk nine holes is even better!

Trying to develop a healthier lifestyle is not a one size fits all approach. Each of us has our limitations, likes and dislikes, and personal challenges. Fortunately, our world is re-focusing on healthier living so there are more options, better food labeling, and more fun approaches to getting fit. Speak with your doctor about your health concerns, health goals, and realistic approaches to responding to both. Make it all work for you.

Latest from the blogosphere

FOR THE RECORD

GREGORY MATHIS

In addition to the weekly For The Record column I write for the newspaper, I also have a blog by the same name that can be accessed from our website.

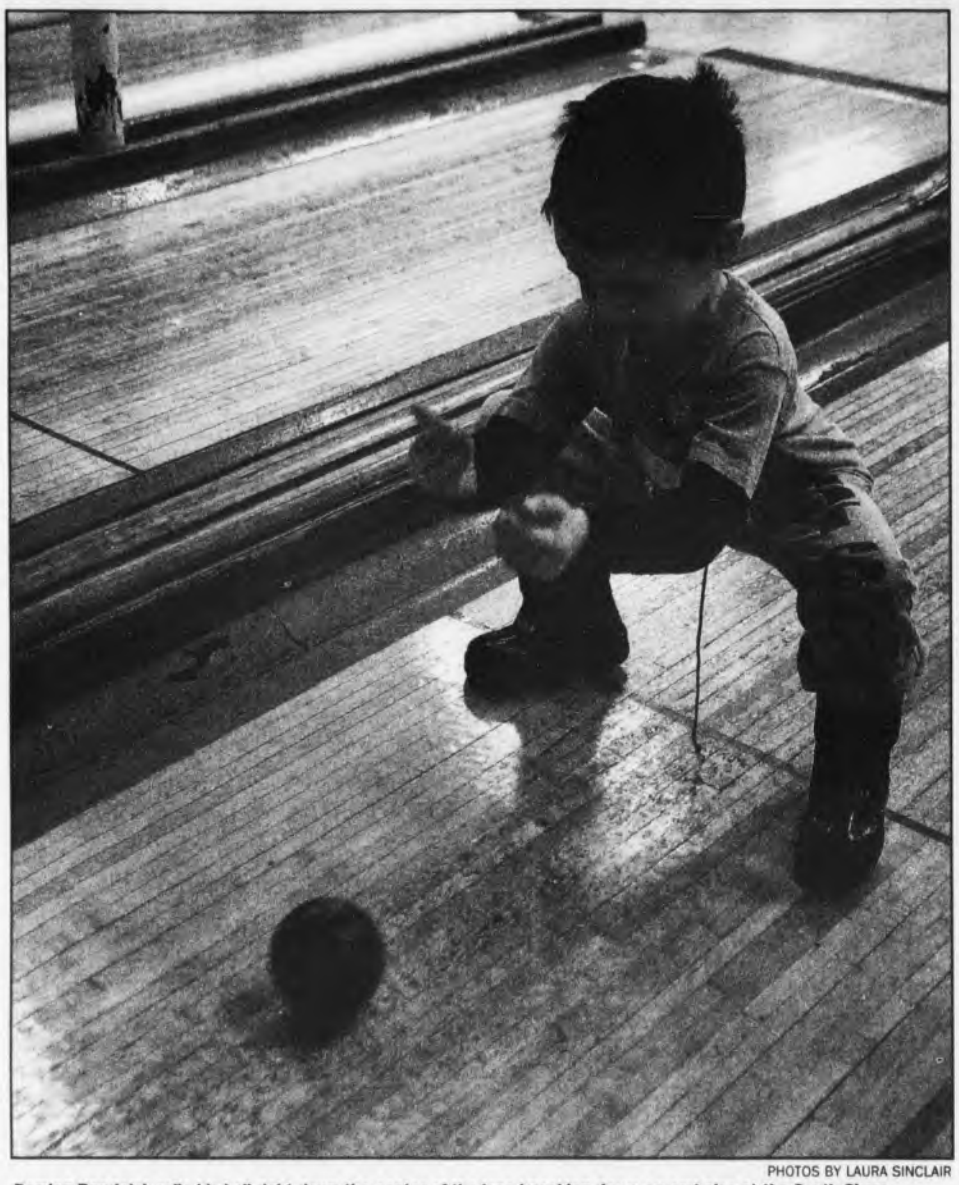
The blog allows me to tackle more topics throughout the course of the week and has proven to be a good way to gauge public opinion on a number of timely issues. It's also generated some pretty good comments from readers to further the various lines of discussion.

It took awhile to get a good flow going with the blog and find the right balance with the column. But it started to take shape in December and after taking the last week of the year off, it's one of my work-related New Year's resolutions to post daily to the blog.

Since the blog is fairly new, I wanted to update readers on some of the topics, comments, and poll results from the last month.

• In mid-December, President Obama and lawmakers repealed the military policy known as "Don't Ask, Don't Tell." The controversial policy was implemented during the Clinton administration 17 years ago. A poll was posted on the blog asking readers if they supported the repeal of "Don't Ask, Don't Tell." Sixty-seven percent said they supported the decision, with 33 percent saying it wasn't broke and didn't need to be fixed. There was also an insightful comment posted to the blog. "It should be up to the peoples involved (aka gays or homosexuals) should choose whether or not they tell."

• The Boston-based meteorologists got off to a shaky start this winter by missing the first significant snowfall of the season. We were lulled into a false sense of security when forecasters predicted the snowstorm was going out to sea and we might get a dusting, if anything. Much to our surprise, we woke up that Monday morning to more than a dusting of snow and as the day went on, the conditions worsened on the South Shore as more than eight inches of snow piled up. That forecasting gaff had me wondering who the most trusted meteorologist was in the Boston area. The poll revealed it was Harvey Leonard of WVCB, Channel 5, with 19.4 percent of the vote. Barry Burbank of WBZ was second (13.9 percent), followed by Pete Bouchard of Channel 7. Fox 25's Kevin Lemanowicz was fourth with 5.5 percent. Interestingly, the other choices in the poll garnered some votes as well. In fact, 13.9 percent chose "other sources not listed in the poll" and a whopping 28 percent said they didn't trust anybody. Predicting the weather is indeed a tough gig in New England.



• Most recently, a poll was posted on the blog getting input from readers on which U.S. Congressman should get the boot as Massachusetts looks to redistrict following the outcome of the 2010 U.S Census. There are currently 10 Congressman representing Mass., and that number will dwindle to nine. Longtime Congressman Barney Frank was the overwhelming favorite to lose his seat, with 66.7 percent of the vote. William Keating, newly elected to represent the 10th Congressional District, was second with 23.5 percent of the vote. Clearly those two were the top choices by readers.

As we get back into a more normal routine with the holidays behind us, please be sure to log on to the blog daily and check out the latest post, vote in the latest poll, and please be sure to leave a comment or two.

Projected shortfall in fiscal 2012 budget

Could be as much as $600,000

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Preliminary budget numbers reveal the town could be facing a $400,000 to $600,000 shortfall in fiscal 2012 operating budget (town and schools).

At the selectmen's meeting Monday night, interim Town Manager Steve Lombard said this estimated shortfall was based on preliminary numbers.

"The only true number we have now is the tax levy," Lombard said. State aid, various grants, fees, excise tax can only be estimated at this time.

The shortfall is the difference between the town's projected revenues and the town's projected expenses. Before the budget goes to Town Meeting the two numbers will have to be balanced, which could mean cuts in town services, an override question or increased fees.

In light of the projections, department heads in town have been asked to make realistic suggestions for cuts.

"I think everybody needs to understand the severity of the situation the town is facing, but I personally feel we can overcome it," Lombard said.

The key questions in the upcoming budget season for both the town and the schools is what kind of services does the town want and what kind of services can the town afford.

Lombard stressed all the numbers, except the tax levy revenues, were estimates and the numbers he used were conservative. The budget was developed with the idea of the actual needs of the town as opposed to developing a budget to fit the available revenue, Lombard said.

Layoffs are not currently on the table.

Selectman Leland Jenkins wanted to see a level-funded budget developed. For Jenkins, a level-funded budget meant a budget with no Proposition 2-1/2 increase in the property tax levy.

Jenkins said it would be a good comparison for the residents to see the two budgets: level services versus level funded. A level-funded budget takes into account the fact many residents in town are struggling and not receiving raises in their jobs, Jenkins said.

Lombard said a level-funded budget, as defined by Jenkins, would result in a more than $1 million shortfall and a drastic cut in services.

Jenkins said it would still be worthwhile to see the two types of budget.

The budget will continue to be worked on over the coming months and numbers from the state and other sources get clearer.

Town Meeting will need to approve the fiscal 2012 budget on Saturday, April 30.

"The budget is a challenging, fluid process," said Selectmen Chair Karen Quigley.

Tight finances for schools

Principals present their budgets

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

When the School Committee began to dig into the budget on Wednesday night it was clear the coming fiscal year would not allow for everything the schools desire, or need. During the course of presentations from all three school principals, several weak spots were identified.

As the School Committee moves forward in the budget process options on how to raise more revenue or cut back will be discussed.

The preliminary fiscal 2012 budget is $15,732,294, which includes negotiated salary increases with the teachers' union, transportation costs and unemployment costs, but does not include other school-related, town-budgeted expenditures, such as building maintenance and health insurance costs.

The proposed budget is a 4.64 percent increase, or $697,816 over this year's budget and aims to provide level services.

The budget proposal assumes a significant loss (approximately $360,000) in the number and amount of offsets available over the current fiscal year and past years.

The schools included an extensive list of requests totaling $157,000 that could not be included in the budget due to fiscal constraints.

Osgood Principal Janet Sheehan said a replacement/revision of the Reading Street text series was needed to update the 2004 editions and align the curriculum with new Common Core standards. The cost is close to $80,000.

Across all schools they wanted to purchase a $4,500 software program, TestWiz, to help process and analyze student test data.

There is also a request for $8,225 to furnish the new fifth-grade classroom at the Deer Hill School with desks and chairs.

But, other items were simply cut back significantly. Professional development line item was budgeted at $20,000 opposed to $50,000 in fiscal 2011. With few exceptions, new textbooks have not been purchased in many years.

"It's embarrassing to have a column of zeros in our budget under textbooks. We need to look at creating a capital improvement plan for textbooks," said School Committee member Paul Schubert.

"It's embarrassing to have a column of zeros in our budget under textbooks. We need to look at creating a capital improvement plan for textbooks."

— School Committee member Paul Schubert

School Committee chair Helene Lieb reiterated this was a bare bones budget and it was known there would be weak spots.

Vice chair Alfred Slanetz said he was concerned the budget would not move the district forward.

"I'm not sure we should be advocating for a budget that puts us behind," Slanetz said.

One of the hot spots in the budget is the athletics. An annual discussion — and one that will occur again this year – is the athletic user fees. In the fiscal 2011 budget, the schools utilized the reserves in the athletic revolving fund. This year that fund has been depleted. As a result, the athletic department is requesting 45 percent more funding than the current fiscal year, a total of $225,000.

Schubert commended the budget for its thriftiness.

"Without the impact (of things out of our control, loss of grants and other revenues) this is a very tight budget," Schubert said.

The past two fiscal years (fiscal 2010 and 2011) there were 2.8 and 2.2 percent increases over the prior year.

The budget discussion will continue throughout the coming months. The next School Committee meeting is Wednesday, Jan. 19. Town Meeting will have the final say on the schools and town budget on Saturday, April 30.

Pledge kindness

Community asked to stand up against bullying

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

At the start of the new year individuals make resolutions and commitments to change and improve over the next 365 days.

The Cohasset Coalition for a Caring Community is thinking a bit bigger. They want to make improvements and change within each member of the community and, in turn, the community at large.

This weekend, the community group kicks off a pledge drive to raise consciousness in the community surrounding the issue of bullying. The pledge asks for a commitment to promote respect for differences and basis rights and dignity for all. It also calls for an end to behavior that's hurtful to others (see full language below).

Over the next few weeks there will be several opportunities for members of the community to sign the pledge (see sidebar).

More than simply focusing on prevention, the pledge is a way to encourage the community to be more aware of their words and actions in everyday situations. The organizers said it's about approaching people in a positive way and with kindness.

"In addition to a great education we want our schools to be a great place to come everyday and I'm not sure every child feels that way," parent and coalition member Trish Morse said. "Everyone in the school community should feel welcomed and cared for."

While bullying mostly is discussed in terms of schools, behavior is not shaped only during school hours and bullying can happen at any time.

"The schools have a role and the community has a role as well. We wanted this discussion to be widespread across all settings: adults, caretakers, businesses, faith communities," said Denise Messina, director of student services and a member of the coalition. "The pledge is a way for the community to demonstrate widespread commitment to a value."

The Cohasset Coalition for a Caring Community has been meeting on a monthly basis since April. Participants represent a cross-section of the community: school administration, teachers, police officers, clergy, and parents.

The coalition was in part an outgrowth of a school and community program about bullying. A father, John Halligan, came to the school to speak to students and parents about his son, Ryan. Ryan died by suicide in 2003 after being bullied by classmates at school and online.

"We don't want to wait for a tragedy to happen to address this issue. We want to be in front of it," said Morse.

The students and staff at all three schools will be signing the pledge sometime next week. Volunteers will be visiting local businesses to get those employees and business owners to sign the pledge.

"We want to involve more than just the residents of Cohasset. We want to get the people who work, play and do business in Cohasset as well," Messina said.

With every pledge signature a bracelet, similar to the LiveStrong bracelets, will be given out. The bracelets say "I signed the pledge" on one side and "Cohasset" on the other.

The group hopes to get at least 3000 community pledges signed and 3000 bracelets handed out. The pledges, which will be printed on different colors of papers will be collected in a clear container and displayed at the high school.

High school assistant principal Mike Gill said the pledge is important effort to tackle bullying.

"The schools are targeting the bystanders to bullying. The bystanders have the power to deflate the bully," Gill said. A community and parent forum is scheduled for the evening of Tuesday, Jan. 18 to talk about the efforts, programs and curriculum being implemented to address bullying within the schools.

In December, the School Committee adopted a bullying prevention and policy plan as required by state law.

For the faith community, coalition member the Reverend Gary Ritts of Second Congregational Church said the pledge reflects what the church teachers — the Golden Rule, loving one another and the value of all God's children.

Parent Ellen Wilson said the pledge is a way for parents to set an example for their kids.

"This is such an important issue, which affects everybody, even if you don't think it does. There is not a person today – child or adult – who has not been witness to bullying, has not participated in bullying, or has not been a target of bullying at some point in their lives," Wilson said.

The pledge and coinciding bracelets is a mechanism to spark conversation about the issue between parents and their kids.

"The whole community is working to create a culture and climate that foster kindness and respect. The coalition has led the charge in bringing the community together to continue to address issues to reduce risk and increase resiliency," said Dr. Barbara Green, a member of the coalition.

Take part and sign the pledge

There are many opportunities for members of the community to sign the pledge over the next two weeks. You can sign the pledge in the cut-out portion below and bring to the Town Hall Recreation Department or Dependable Cleaners in the village.

Volunteers will be soliciting signatures from parents at the Recreation basketball games this Saturday from 8a.m. to 4p.m. at both Osgood and Deer Hill Schools. (If you'd like to volunteer to collect pledges on Saturday, contact Ellen Wilson at ellenwilson@verizon.net.)

Attendees of the annual Martin Luther King Jr. breakfast on Jan. 17 at St. Stephen's Church will be able to sign the pledge as well. Local churches are also involved in the pledge signing.

Students and school staff will be signing the pledge during school hours next week.

Residents can sign a pledge and receive a bracelet at Dependable Cleaners or at the Town Hall Recreation Department Office.

THE PLEDGE

I, _____, pledge to promote respect for human differences and the basic rights and dignity of all, and to avoid behavior that is hurtful to others.

Taking a look at town technology

One of the items interim Town Manager Steve Lombard is digging into is the software and hardware needs of the town.

First on the list for needed updates is the town's financial and accounting software.

"The one we have now is limited...and cumbersome," Lombard said. The software has been serving the town for more than 15 years.

Lombard is developing a phased plan to update the town's technology and will present it to the Capital Budget Committee in the coming months leading up to Town Meeting.

There are many software options out there, but Lombard said the challenge is finding the right one to suit the town. A basis package could be purchased and then added to as the budget allows in the coming years.

Cable studio could go live next month

The town's cable studio should be up and running by the end of February. The much-delayed studio is to be installed at the high school, adjacent to the school library. Selectman Paul Carlson, who also serves on the Cable Advisory Committee, said one of the key pieces of equipment for the studio is on a six-week back order.

Currently, Verizon subscribers are unable to view televised town meetings (Selectmen and School Committee) because that service providers is not yet hooked up to the town's cable station.

"It's important as many people as possible are up and running (on local cable) as we enter the budget process and warrant article review," said Selectmen Chair Karen Quigley.

Carlson said the committee was very aware of the urgency to get the studio up and running.

The cable studio will also allow residents to produce their own local television programming after receiving training.

Flibotte takes Marshfield title

By Matt Brooks
SPECIAL TO THE COHASSET MARINER

Wrestlers from across Massachusetts made their way to Marshfield High School this past week, and for two days engaged in brutal combat against one another.

The teams gathered together, preparing for war, rolling around the mats into lethal postures and practicing the moves with which they would ruin their opponent.

Following one of the more tigerish snow storms of the decade, those two grueling, icy days of gut-wrenching engagements saw the rise of champions.

Flibotte beat 15-0 Jake Melhman (North Andover) 3-2 in the first round.

BOYS BASKETBALL

Into the fire

By William Wassersug
WWASSERS@CNC.COM

After six games, the Cohasset boys basketball team is more than halfway to accomplishing one of its primary goals – qualifying for the MIAA South Sectional tournament.

To get there, Cohasset needs 10 victories.

They've got six so far with a sizzling 6-0 start (4-0 South Shore League) that includes an impressive 66-45 win over Carver on Tuesday night at home.

Now comes the hard part.

In the coming days, Cohasset will face undefeated Rockland on Friday night on the road, 5-2 Norwell on the road, 5-1 Abington at home and 5-1 Mashpee on the road next Friday.

All those games are South Shore League contests.

Cohasset got a huge first quarter from Sam Richardson in the Carver game.

Richardson hit a pair of threes and three more buckets to score 12 points in the frame to help Cohasset to a 19-9 first-quarter lead.

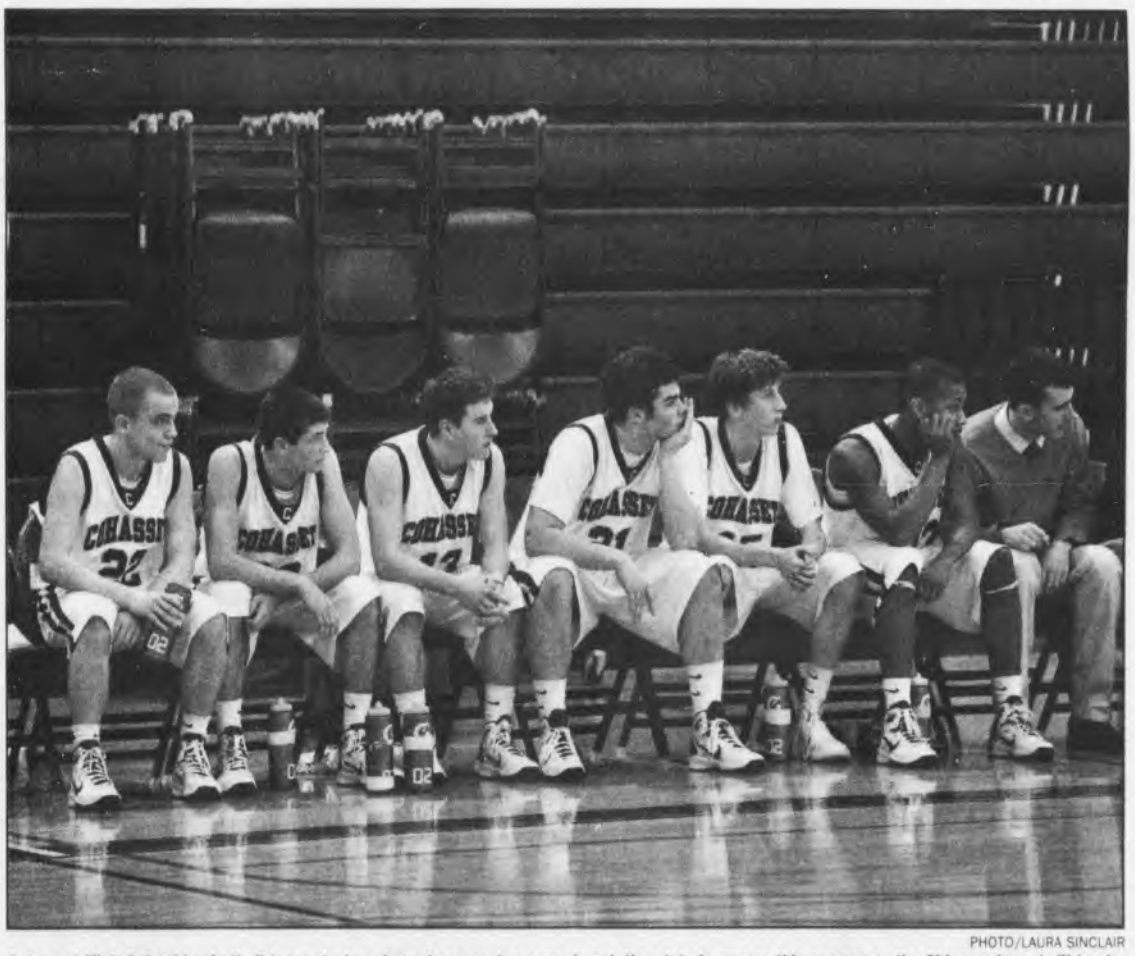
Richardson finished with 20 points, while shooting 50 percent from the floor and hit all four of his free throws.

Kyrel Jaundoo pitched in with five points and three steals in the quarter and Robert Jones added a steal and breakaway layup to the delight of a large crowd who were there to honor Jones' mom, Jacqueline Kurtz, who passed away on New Year's eve.

In the second quarter, Cohasset continued their successful press and held Carver to just three points (one bucket and a free throw) as the Skippers upped the lead to 32-12.

Jones notched five points in the stanza. He finished the game with 12 points, 8 assists and 4 steals.

Jaundoo finished the game with 15 points on 64 percent shooting from the floor to go with 14 rebounds, including 10 on the defensive end.



Shane Haggerty had two fast-break layups in the game and Chris Murphy played well off the bench.

"It was a very impressive first half in an emotionally charged atmosphere," Cohasset coach Bo Ruggiero said. "I couldn't have been more pleased for Robert and the players."

After the half, there was a bit of a letdown, and Carver outscored the Skippers 19-17 to head into the fourth quarter with Cohasset ahead 49-31.

In the final frame, Cohasset kept control, outscoring Carver

Cohasset High School basketball team starters, have been seeing some bench time late in games this season as the Skippers have built leads that have allowed coach Bo Ruggiero to clear the bench late in games. Here, Christian Davis, Shane Haggerty, Robert Jones, Robbie Mahoney, Sam Richardson and Kyrel Jaundoo watch with a minute and a half left with their team up twenty points over E. Bridgewater. GIRLS BASKETBALL

Hard work still paying dividends

The Cohasset girls basketball team continues to impress, improving to 7-0 this season with an impressive pair of victories in the Hingham Holiday Tournament.

Hingham beat Division 1 Brookline and King Philip to win the tournament title.

In the final, center Carli Haggerty (29 points) was named the MVP as the Skippers (6-0) cruised in the final of the Hingham Holiday Tournament. Cohasset, the defending Div. 4 state champ, raced out to a 16-0 lead and was up 28-14 at the half of a 52-29 win.

"The kids have been playing well through our first seven," Cohasset coach John LeVangie said. "The tournament in Hingham was a big win. We beat a Division 1 and Div. 2 team there."

The key so far, has been defense.

"We're holding teams in the 20's," LeVangie said. "And every kid has played in every game."

Haggerty, a senior captain, has stepped up as a scorer and rebounder this season.

"Carli has been playing super," LeVangie said. "She has been one of what I've called our eight or nine starters the past few sea-

The Cohasset hockey team had some time off before they got back to action Wednesday against Hull at Randolph's Zapustas Rink.

It was a solid effort for the Skippers in a 5-1 victory that gave several younger players a chance to play, which was important for coach Bob Walsh because of the upcoming schedule.

"We have four games in five days," Walsh said after the Hull win. "We were a little rusty, but this is a big week for us. We wanted to try a few things and keep everybody healthy. When we play Abington/East Bridgewater and Norwell Saturday and Sunday we want kids to be healthy and rested."

In the Hull win, Alex Evans scored two goals, Jamie faber added two goals and T.J. Bicknell scored for Cohasset, which improved to 3-1-1 (2-0-1 South Shore League).

"In the first period it was the Goetz line (Anders Goetz, Evans and John Collins) and the Cravers line," Walsh said. "We went into the room after one up 2-0 and felt pretty comfortable. In the second period, the Calorio line (Vinnie Calorio, Faber and sons. She's been around and she understands the system. This season, big numbers were available and she's putting up big numbers."

Still, this has been a team effort.

"It's never the same person," LeVangie said. "That's been a key for us. Someone different has stepped up every game."

Cohasset still uses the press and tough defense to lead the charge.

"The kids buy into it," LeVangie said. "We do a lot of running. They enjoy it."

Defensively, Anna Serakis and Allie Farren have led the charge, while Rachel Fredey and Lindsey Davis have also played very well.

"The starters have been there four years and the senior leadership has been great," LeVangie said. "They've set a great example for the kids under them. The kids work hard every day. They get after it."

The Skippers will have their work cut out for them in the next week or so with games against Rockland, Abington and Norwell.

Norwell has been exceptional this season as they're off to an unbeaten start.

That game is Tuesday at home at 6:30.

"Norwell has beaten some good teams," LeVangie said. "Let's hope we both still unbeaten for that game."

In their last game, Tuesday night, Cohasset beat Carver 50-26.

Bicknell) played well. Jamie Faber sniped a nice unassisted shot to the top corner. It was a nice unassisted goal."

Walsh said Hull's goalie Matt Farrell played well.

"We peppered him good," Walsh said. "He came up big. I've seen him play before. He's an All-Star."

Cohasset played South Shore VoTech Thursday and has Abington/East Bridgewater Saturday at 8 p.m. at Connell Rink in Weymouth and Norwell on Sunday at 8 p.m. at Hingham's Pilgrim Arena.

Walsh is looking forward to the test, but is practical as well.

"SSVT has some crafty players," he said. "They've beat some good teams, so you can't take them lightly. Abington/East Bridgewater is strong and Norwell is always good. They're rivals. They're always a battle. We could individually be the two worst teams in the league and still when we play them it always steps up a level. Those will be good games. My guys are up this year. They're looking forward to it. By the end of the week we'll see where we need to adjust. By that point we'll have played nine games. We'll be almost halfway through the season."

Cohasset needs 20 points to make the tournament, and has seven in five games.

"That's pretty nice right now," Walsh said. "We're playing pretty well. We don't make other teams nervous, but we're flying under the radar."

17-14, including a three-pointer by Jones, who left the game to a standing ovation with four minutes left to play.

"It was a different type of atmosphere," Ruggiero said. "It was a huge crowd and Robert had the support of his whole family."

In all, seven players got in the scoring column and everybody was able to get some playing time.

Murphy, Joe Buckley, Rocco Languelle and Christian Davis all made contributions off the bench.In the team's previous game against Tri-Valley League Ashland last Thursday, Cohasset notched a 62-54 win.

Jones led all scorers with 18 points, while Robbie Mahoney chiped in 14 points and 12 rebounds.

Richardson added 12 points and Jaundoo scored 9 points to go with 9 rebounds and 6 steals coming off the press.

Cohasset grabbed 12 steals in the game, using their press.

Two nights before that, Cohasset beat South Shore Christian 71-40 behind a 16-point effort from Jaundoo.

WRESTLING

"It was a great tournament for Thomas. That 171 pound weight class was the deepest in the tournament," Cohasset coach Torin Sweeney said. "His second round he beat a sectional champ (Matt Ketcham) from Silver Lake. Then he beat John Armstrong who placed at States last year and Johnny White was undefeated."

Captains Alex Kinnealey (Sr.) and Gus Helbock (Jr.) both attained fifth place in their weight classes, 215 and 119 respectively.

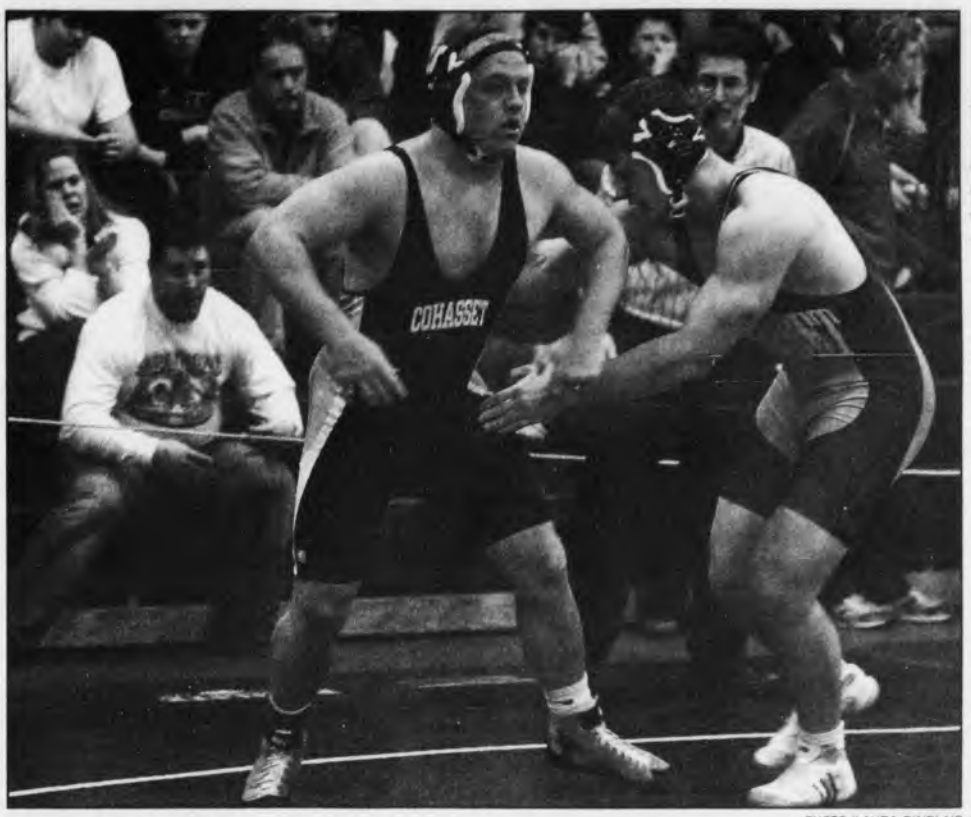
Captain Justin Yeager (Sr.) placed eighth in the 160-lb weight class.

Derek Froio (Jr.) wrestled three hard matches at 152-lbs, and sophomore Tommy Ryan had two most thrilling bouts.

After the tournament had come and gone, Flibotte commented that, "Cohasset had a great showing, all of our kids wrestled tough and a couple of underclassmen really stepped up big filling in some spots."

When asked about the current condition of the team, he responded, "At this time of the year, the number of wrestlers in the room really drops, but it seems everyone is sticking with it. We haven't really had anyone quit."

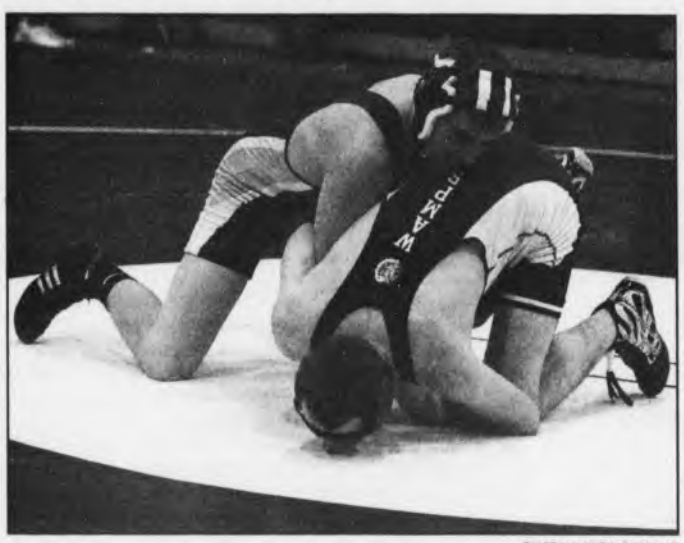
Cohasset finished 19th overall out of 30 teams, and outscored both neighboring Scituate and Hingham.



Another lofty tournament awaits this weekend, as Cohasset High School will host the Cohasset Invitational Tournament on Saturday, January 8.

The snow day is Sunday.

Eleven teams are expected at the tournament, which should be outstanding.



"I'm Pleased with our numbers," Sweeney said of the team this year. "We have 35 kids wrestling. It's been an adjustment, but it's a great problem to have a crowded wrestling room. In the past if we had an injury there's no back-up. Now we have kids who can get out there and give it a go if that happens. That's one of reasons we've been beat by bigger teams in past."

Cohasset is 4-4-1 now and the dual meets start the following Friday with 11 dual meets in three weeks.

Into the fire

FROM BASKET, PAGE <NONE>

Haggerty added 11 points and Jones knocked in 10.

Freshman, Joe Buckley scored 8 points and 5 rebounds in the win.

Cohasset led 19-11 after the first quarter, and pulled away in the second quarter.

After six games, Jones has been the scoring leader, but Cohasset is much more than a one or two-man show.

Jones is averaging 19 points-per-game, while Richardson has been averaging 13.

Jaundoo has averaged 11 points and 8 rebounds and Mahoney is at 8 points and 8 boards per game.

Haggerty is averaging 8 points-per-game as well.

The bench has also produced with Murphy averaging 5 points and 5 boards in limited minutes.

While the 6-0 start is big, Ruggiero knows anything can happen, especially with the upcoming slate of games.

"Rockland will be our biggest test so far," he said. "They should be favored. Norwell was 20-2 last year and they're playing well. Abington was the league champion last year and they're 5-1, then we play Mashpee. They're 5-1. This is a stretch of iron. We can't be overconfident. We're coming off a nine-win season."

Ruggiero is pleased with what his team has done to this point.

"The kids have worked hard," he said. "They've paid attention. We've played people who might not have had the same skill or experience to this point. Now we start to play another level of team with winning records. We know we can't take anyone lightly."

Ruggiero said the team has been focused.

"It doesn't matter who your next opponent is," he said. "If they were 0-6 we wouldn't play less hard. You have to go and play the game. Basketball is unique in that we play Tuesday night in an emotional, hard fought game and then we have to turn right around and play our next opponent. In this game you can't peak or go into a valley. You have to do what you do consistently."

A New Year at CHS

LIFE AT CHS

NATALIE DIGNAM

With winter sports in full swing and semester grades closing in a few short weeks, students are feeling the academic rush.

Here at Cohasset High, our hearts are with the Jones family during this difficult time. Jacqueline Marine Kurtz will truly be missed. Our thoughts and prayers are also with the Lieb-Lappen family as Cohasset mourns the loss of Ed Lappen.

Despite the difficult losses of this New Year, welcome back CHS. After a surprisingly short, and stormy, vacation, we're back at school, but still feeling the effects of the New Year. And what better way to usher in 2011 (possibly our last year on earth according to the Incas, or Aztecs, or whatever) than a return to the halls of CHS?

Amid the trials of parking in spaces buried in snow banks, or the struggles of extended power outages over vacation, the effects of the great nor'easter of 2010 are still present. With winter sports in full swing and semester grades closing in a few short weeks, students are feeling the academic rush. But there are other ways to relieve the stress, so get involved.

Best Buddies will be meeting on Wednesdays at 2 o'clock in the upper lobby (or senior lounge) and Tuesday Night Homework Club will resume at the Paul Pratt Library to assist all elementary and middle school students. This Saturday, the CHS chorus will be performing at the Providence Bruins and Senior District Music Festival will be holding auditions at the Duxbury High School Music Center for all students who are interested.

That's all for this week, Happy New Year CHS!

Natalie Dignam is a senior at Cohasset High. Her column appears weekly during the school year.

All children in grades two to five are welcome to participate in this fun, community event. Each team is made up of three children in the same grade. Team members could be from class, a sports team, or a Cohasset resident in another school.

Registration, including a tee shirt and medal, is $25 per speller. Forms can be downloaded at www.cohasseteducation.org.

ADVERTORIAL

Maximizing your potential

Continuing your education can widen your path to success

DEAN COLLEGE

The question "What do you want to be when you grow up?" takes on new meaning in today's world. Today new jobs are being created that didn't exist five or 10 years ago, making that question difficult to answer.

Gone are the days of complacency when someone could settle into a job for a lifetime. With technology, innovation and our economic climate, wage earners must be flexible and adapt. How can that work to your advantage? Education.

By building on the education you currently have, you can pursue a certificate program, associate's or bachelor's degree to advance your career.

Dean College in Franklin offers flexible programs for students who work full or part time. That means students can create a schedule that fits their lifestyle, while enhancing their value in the competitive marketplace.

There are three things that you should look for in a continuing education program:

➤ Flexibility. Does the program have evening and weekend courses? Is there an accelerated option that allows you to pursue a certificate or degree on a faster timeline?

➤ Accessibility. Do the faculty members make themselves available for questions, extra help and mentoring? Are they available outside of class time?

➤ Affordability. Does the program have advisors who can help you maximize your education dollars?

For most people contemplating going back to school, the first consideration is time. Dean College offers classes in the evenings, on weekends, and through an innovative series of accelerated programs that allows students to attend classes for two weeks in January and May and earn the same credit as a traditional semester-long class.

Students also look for other innovative offerings, including custom programs created for a particular employer. Dean has worked with numerous businesses in the region to offer programs that allow students to take classes where they work.

The next thing to consider is the accessibility of the faculty and advisers, which is key, especially if a student hasn't been in the classroom for several years. Students should look for a program where the faculty is readily available in person to respond to questions about the coursework, or the education or employment track the student has chosen.

At Dean, in addition to having faculty support, students are assigned a professional adviser, which gives Dean students two resources for scheduling, advising, academic and career advice.

And, of course, value is an important factor to consider. According to the Department of Commerce, those who earn a bachelor's degree earn $1 million more in their working lifetime than their peers who do not have a degree.

Make a resolution to yourself to widen your path to success and be prepared for what's next in your life.

Registration is now open at Dean for both intersession and spring programs. For more information, call 508-541-1624.

Course focuses on wizardly world

GATEHOUSE NEWS SERVICE

When her 11th birthday had come and gone, Kelsey Bergeron was disappointed that she hadn't gotten an invitation to the Hogwarts School of Witchcraft and Wizardry.

Now 18, Bergeron still loves the "Harry Potter" book and film series she grew up with, and she has a unique opportunity to study them in college.

The Bridgewater State University freshman is enrolled in "The Ethics of 'Harry Potter,' " a sociology seminar that relates the themes of J.K. Rowling's fantasy series to the ideas of Aristotle.

"I started reading the 'Harry Potter' books in the third or fourth grade. It was one of the first chapter books I read, and probably the first book I read of my own accord," Bergeron said.

The college students taking this seminar were young children when the first of the seven "Harry Potter" books by Rowling was released in the United States in 1997. The students can hardly remember a time when the boy wizard and his friends and enemies were not part of their lives.

"Harry Potter" has become part of American and global culture.

As the first of a two-part film finale was released recently, the generation of readers that first fell in love with the magical stories is coming to terms with the end of the series.

Jennifer Mogg, who designed the seminar, said it will delve more deeply into the philosophical significance of the books.

" 'Harry Potter' has become part of our lexicon. It has become cultural capital," Mogg said.

"(The series) speaks to fundamental questions of the human condition: What is justice? Courage? Good? Evil? Every person and every culture must ask and answer these fundamental questions," she said.

Students say they still love the books but now read them with the eye of someone who is older and has experienced more challenging situations.

"I got a sense of deeper appreciation for the books as I got older, but my opinion never changed, because the books and I grew up together and they will always be part of my life," said Amanda Wood, 17, of Norwood.

"I have grown up reading these books and they are my source of comfort and escape when I need one," she said.

Stephen Joy, 19, of North Easton said his generation is attached to the books.

"It's a part of my generation's culture, just as The Beatles were with the baby boomers, as 'Saturday Night Fever' was with the '70s, and 'Ferris Bueller' and 'Breakfast Club' were with the '80s," Joy said.

The final book in the series came out in 2007, but bookstores still devote display space to the series. Earlier this year, a theme park dedicated to the world Rowling created for Harry Potter opened at Universal Studios in Orlando, Fla.

Jennifer Drisko, 18, of Sharon was 12 when she started reading the books and is still a fan.

"Every time you reread the books, you can discover something you missed before," she said.

"The books were unpredictable for readers living in a predictable world. School was cool in Harry Potter's world compared to the routinized education venue of most schools," said Dr. Kim MacInnis, another sociology professor at Bridgewater State University. "Life has become so routinized for kids and adults that the series and the movies helped us escape our 'schedules' and pretend for a while."

COLLEGE MATTERS

Continuing education:

Not just for job seekers anymore

By Susan Kennedy
DAILY NEWS CORRESPONDENT

SHUTTERSTOCK PHOTOS

Before signing up for a class, take a look at what jobs are projected to be in demand in the future. Make sure you are being educated and trained for a profession that offers employment opportunities.

As a job coach, I am often asked this question: What are the hot careers, and how do I train for them? Going back to school for another degree and/or further training seems to be the answer for many people in an unstable job market.

In fact, many people collecting unemployment benefits have taken advantage of state and other programs to sharpen or develop new skills in hopes of finding a job in this challenging economy. And for many people, and the jobs they're pursuing, that can be the right answer.

But before you start filling out those applications, you may want to take a look at what jobs are projected to be in demand in the future. Making sure you are being educated and trained for the profession that offers the most employment opportunities is an important part of the process.

According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, the top 10 jobs projected to grow the most between now and 2018 (in order of growth estimates, from largest to smallest) are biomedical engineers, network systems and data communications analysts, home health aides, personal and home care aides, financial examiners, medical scientists, physician assistants, skin care specialists, biochemists and biophysicists, and athletic trainers.

Clearly, some of these professions require a college degree and beyond. Working as a biomedical engineer will require a bachelor's degree and, in many cases, a master's degree. Someone who already has a science degree may only have to supplement their existing education, but for someone with little or no science background, the commitment to pursue this career is a tall order.

If you look closely at this list, many of these professions have fewer educational and training requirements, so a bachelor's degree may not be required or even appropriate. For example, becoming a personal trainer requires certification but not necessarily a bachelor's degree in kinesiology.

This scenario seems straightforward: once a person chooses the career they want to pursue, they can easily map out a plan that will get them the training and, eventually, the job they want.

But it may not be enough to go back to school and acquire the degree or certification to land one of the "hot" jobs. An important factor in securing jobs in growing fields is to couple an in-demand degree or certification program with expertise in emerging trends. For example, successful communications professionals will have to master social media and the analytics that come with it. Current computer-science students are often advised to couple their degrees with studies in marketing, accounting or finance. Companies are looking for people with multiple skill sets who can move fluidly between, say, marketing and operations.

We are seeing a growing demand for "horizontal" skills in the workplace, or skills that may not directly impact your current position but will help gain a more global view of the organization. It is not simply enough anymore to master your specific field. The workplace is lean and people are being asked and expected to move throughout the organization quickly and efficiently. Consider the accountant who is now being asked to have a working knowledge of marketing and/or operations or the human resources professional for whom an intricate knowledge of finance is now expected.

Staying on top of your career or simply not peaking too early requires continued learning about things both directly and indirectly related to the current position. Lifelong learning is the new credo and this could mean taking a course, pursuing a certificate or enrolling in a degree program. Many universities and community colleges are offering courses and certification programs in budding sectors.

Adult education programs also offer courses that are educational for a reasonable cost. For example, the Boston Center for Adult Education offers a two-session course titled "Making Sense of Social Media." Mass Bay Community College offers a certificate program in accounting that could help an operations professional understand the payroll impact of a particular business strategy.

Look to be known as a "slash" person. Slash, as in the finance professional who is known for automating financial reports and testing protocols or the marketing/social media advocate, the operations/training development expert and so on.

If you're pursuing a degree, consider taking a few classes in a new and emerging field that will help boost your resume and your skill set. If you're in a large company, take advantage of the educational programs and development opportunities these organizations typically offer. Look to develop the horizontal skills that many organizations are now deeming critical to their future growth.

SALOME'S STARS
FOR RELEASE WEEK
OF JAN. 17, 2011

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) Aspects call for care in preparing material for submission. Although you might find it bothersome to go over what you've done, the fact is, rechecking could be worth your time and effort.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) The week is favorable for Bovines who welcome change. New career opportunities wait to be checked out. You might also want to get started on that home makeover you've been considering.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) You might have to be extra careful to protect that surprise you have planned, thanks to a certain snoopy someone who wants to know more about your plans than you're willing to share.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) Family ties are strong this week, although an old and still-unresolved problem might create some unpleasant moments. If so, look to straighten the situation out once and for all.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) Although the Lion might see it as an act of loyalty and courage to hold on to an increasingly shaky position, it might be wiser to make changes now to prevent a possible meltdown later.

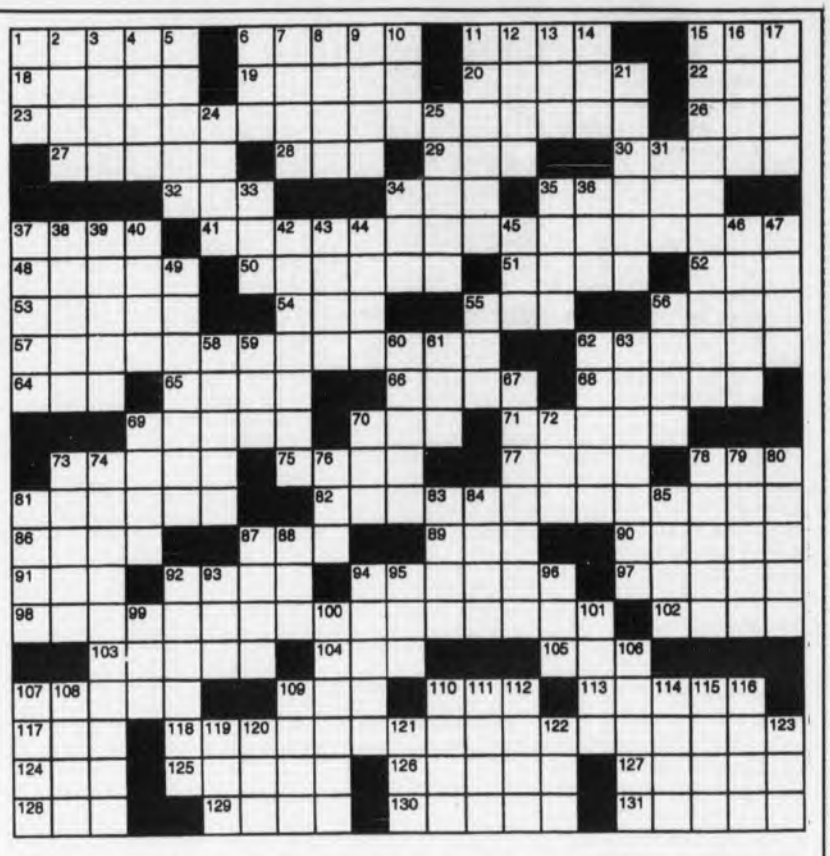
VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) Your gift for adding new people to your circle of friends works overtime this week, thanks largely to contacts you made during the holidays. A surprise awaits you at the week's end.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) Don't hide your talents. It's a good time to show what you can do to impress people who can do a lot for you. A dispute with a family member might still need some smoothing over.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) Be open with your colleagues about your plan to bring a workplace matter out into the open. You'll want their support, and they'll want to know how you'll pull it off.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) Trying to patch up an unraveling relationship is often easier said than done. But it helps to discuss and work out any problems that arise along the way.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) While your creative aspect remains high this week, you might want to call on your practical side to help work out the why and wherefore of an upcoming decision.



AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) Dealing with someone's disappointment can be difficult for Aquarians, who always try to avoid giving pain. But a full explanation and a show of sympathy can work wonders.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) Getting a job-related matter past some major obstacles should be easier this week. A personal situation might take a surprising but not necessarily unwelcome turn by the week's end.

Fun By The Numbers

Like puzzles? Then you'll love sudoku. This mind-bending puzzle will have you hooked from the moment you square off, so sharpen your pencil and put your sudoku savvy to the test!

Here's How It Works:

Sudoku puzzles are formatted as a 9x9 grid, broken down into nine 3x3 boxes. To solve a sudoku, the numbers 1 through 9 must fill each row, column and box. Each number can appear only once in each row, column and box. You can figure out the order in which the numbers will appear by using the numeric clues already provided in the boxes. The more numbers you name, the easier it gets to solve the puzzle!

10-week-old littermates need a home

The week Hull Seaside Animal Rescue is featuring two littermates. The black kitten, Licorice, has such long hair that it looks more like a toy than a real live kitten! Licorice is a long, long, haired black male kitten. Stormy is a shorthaired gray female. They are 10 weeks old and HSAR would very much like to them to be adopted together. Stormy is a bit shy and Licorice takes good care of her.

They were left outside to fend for themselves, but a good Samaritan found them and brought them to them shelter. They have learned to trust humans and now purr and love to be cuddled. They don't come any cuter than these two.

If you'd like to meet them and our many adoptable felines, HSAR has open hours on Saturday from 2-3pm and Monday from 6:30-7:30. The shelter is located at 50 L St., Hull.

If these hours aren't convenient, please call Shirl at 781 925 3380. The HSAR website is: www.hsar.org and the email is: hsar@verizon.net

Quick Flicks

Oscar chatter has already begun for "The Fighter," as praise gets heaped upon Christian Bale and Mark Wahlberg.

127 HOURS (R) Thrilling true tale about mountain climber Aron Ralston (James Franco), who had to amputate a limb after getting trapped under a boulder in Utah. Director Danny Boyle does a great job of giving a static story some kinetic energy. The pivotal moment is as disturbing as you feared. But the emotional impact of the film is far greater than any gore: The ending will have you crying like a baby. (A-)

ALL GOOD THINGS (PG-13) "All Good Things" must end, but it can't end soon enough. This is the strange but true story of suspected triple murderer Robert Durst, the cross-dressing sociopath and former heir to a vast New York City real estate empire. Squeezing 23 years into two hours leaves no room for the film to breathe. Director Andrew Jarecki likes to shock, but he did it far more effectively with his documentary "Capturing the Friedmans." (C)

BHUTTO (Unrated) Documentary about the fascinating life of the late Benazir Bhutto, the first woman to lead a Muslim nation as prime minister of Pakistan. (Not Reviewed)

BLACK SWAN (R) Director Darren Aronofsky's dark view of the ballet world. Natalie Portman plays a ballerina who may lose her starring role in "Swan Lake" unless she can unleash the seductress within. The alluring Mila Kunis plays a dancer in the wings, ready to steal the role. But the film is about more than backstage politics. Aronofsky provides a graphic depiction of the anguish — physical and emotional — that comes with being an artist. (A-)

BURLESQUE (PG-13) Cher mentors Christina Aguilera in the fine art of burlesque, in this film that's little more than a series of music videos strung together by a thin plot. In the music numbers, Aguilera is a show-stopper, with plenty of va-va-voom. But there's a reason she wins Grammys and not Oscars, and it's painfully obvious every time the music stops: She can't act. She tries her best, playing the Iowa girl who pursues her dreams all the way to L.A. But you have to admire that Aguilera has the guts to try; "Burlesque" could be her "Glitter." (D)

THE CHRONICLES OF NARNIA: VOYAGE OF THE DAWN TREADER (PG) The Pevensie family return to the screen for an adventurous ocean voyage full of dragons, dwarfs and that lion voiced by Liam Neeson. Kids are likely to miss all the biblical allegories, but parents will love the gorgeous scenery. It's disappointing that Susan and Peter make only brief appearances. (B-)

FAIR GAME (PG-13) The real-life story of CIA agent Valerie Plame (a perfectly cast Naomi Watts) who was outed by Dick Cheney and company as revenge against her husband. Watts gives a remarkable, multi-faceted performance, part super-spy, part mom. And Sean Penn shows an uncanny knack for playing her SOB husband. It's an important story — not even the government is more powerful than the truth. "Fair Game" tells Plame's story in a clear and impactful way. (A-)

FASTER (R) After 10 years in prison, Driver (Dwayne Johnson) is focused on avenging the murder of his brother, who died during the bank robbery that led to Driver's imprisonment. It's a loud and relentless revenge film, but the non-stop nature of it, along with some nice plot twists, makes it a very watchable action film. (B)

THE FIGHTER (R)Christian Bale and Mark Wahlberg play Dicky Eklund and Micky Ward, the Lowell brothers who shook up the boxing world in the 1990s. Bale kind of steals the show from Wahlberg. As Micky's unsuccessful half-brother, Bale is gaunt (he lost 30 pounds for the part) and thoroughly convincing. But the most remarkable performance comes from Melissa Leo, playing Micky's overbearing mother. Every time Leo is onscreen, the movie becomes deliriously alive and unpredictable. (B)

GULLIVER'S TRAVELS (PG) Comedian Jack Black stars in this film, based on a 1726 book by Jonathan Swift. In the movie, a mail-room-flunkie and aspiring travel writer, Gulliver (Black) gets tossed by the Bermuda Triangle onto an island with miniature inhabitants, and starts to like the feeling of being looked up to. Expect some silliness. (Not Reviewed)

HARRY POTTER AND THE DEALTHY HALLOWS (PG-13) In Part 1 of the final installment, the wizardly Harry is drawn ever closer to the forces of evil ruled by the dastardly Voldemort. But this is easily the worst of the seven "Harry Potter" films, as it forgets everything that made the Potter films so endearing. The magic dissipates behind a thick cloud of melancholy and angst. It's hardly the sprightly fantasy we know and love. It's a bummer to be out of Hogwarts, and the cliques, rivalries and romances brewing within its formidable walls. And good luck following the plot. (C)

HOW DO YOU KNOW (R) Director James L. Brooks doesn't live up to the expectations he created so long ago with "Broadcast News" and "Terms of Endearment." Reese Witherspoon plays a pro softball player torn between a corporate executive (Paul Rudd) and a Major League pitcher (Owen Wilson). The film manages to say absolutely nothing about anything. (C)

I LOVE YOU PHILLIP MORRIS (R) It's love at first sight when Steven (Jim Carrey) meets fellow con, Phillip (Ewan McGregor). At that point, this raucous, oddball comedy offers up some laughs as it careens into and out of prisons, courtrooms and hospitals. (B)

INSIDE JOB (PG-13) Matt Damon narrates this timely documentary from Charles Ferguson ("No End in Sight") about the hows and whys of the 2008 economic meltdown. Ferguson does an excellent job of explaining and simplifying without dumbing-down issues for people who wouldn't know a derivative from a dirigible. A sign the film works: At times, your anger level will go to 11. (A-)

THE KING'S SPEECH (R) How England's King George VI resolved his speech impediment is the theme of this classy and winning production starring Colin Firth and Geoffrey Rush. The compelling relationship at the center of the story belongs to Bertie (Firth) and his speech therapist (Rush), as Bertie, completely unprepared for the job that has just been forced upon him, must get control of his speech impediment at a time when world leaders — from FDR to Hitler — were inspiring nations with their words. (A)

LITTLE FOCKERS (PG-13) Here's a shock: The tapped-out "Fockers" films offer nothing new (or funny) in this third installment. You get the same dysfunctional family shenanigans. This shtick was a lot funnier the first time we saw it. (D+)

LOVE AND OTHER DRUGS (R) Anne Hathaway as a young woman with stage 1 Parkinson's and Jake Gyllenhaal as a prescription-drug-dealing lothario shine in an unusual rom-com. As their relationship matures, they have to deal with their shared fears of being emotionally close to someone. Director Ed Zwick also squeezes in a condemnation of the prescription drug industry. Be prepared: Hathaway and Gyllenhaal are naked during much of the film. (B)

MARWENCOL (R) A documentary about Mark Hogancamp, who was beaten to a pulp and left for dead by five youths outside a bar. When he awoke from a coma, he couldn't walk, talk or remember a single detail about his existence prior to the assault. He picked up the pieces by piecing together his own unique form of therapy: Erecting a tiny Belgian village, circa 1942, populated by dozens of Barbie-style dolls. The fascinating man makes for a moving and insightful documentary. (A-)

MEGAMIND (PG) An animated tale about a bored supervillain (Will Ferrell) outsmarting himself by creating an even bigger menace (Jonah Hill) so fierce, it forces him to do good. The story is predictable every step of the way, and too often it will remind you of the superior "Despicable Me." But the romance between Megamind and a TV reporter (voiced by Tina Fey) saves the film. (B-)

RABBIT HOLE (PG-13) Nicole Kidman and Aaron Eckhart take something that's devastatingly sad — a couple loses their 4-year-old-son in a tragic accident — and turn it into something compelling and nuanced. In adapting his Pulitzer-winning play to the screen, David Lindsay-Abaire not only expands on the story's themes of acceptance and forgiveness, he also injects generous amounts of unexpected humor that keep the dark subject from swallowing the film. (A-)

RARE EXPORTS: A CHRISTMAS TALE (PG-13) You'd better watch out. Santa Claus is coming to town in the delightfully funny "Rare Exports: A Christmas Tale," and he's not in a jolly mood. This amusing and cynical take on the Christmas legend offers up a Santa who's not as sweet and generous as we think. A wonderfully subversive black comedy. (B+)

Jan. 19 - The Gulf Oil Spill – Dr. Judith McDowell, Woods Hole Oceanographic Institute.

The explosion and sinking of the Deepwater Horizon oil platform in the Gulf of Mexico and the subsequent discharge of over 200 million gallons of crude oil and gas may be the largest environmental catastrophe in U.S. history. Effects of the discharged oil and dispersant chemicals are expected to be widespread and long lasting in many environments of the Gulf of Mexico with significant economic impacts to fisheries, tourism and coastal development. Many scientists from Woods Hole ceanographic were recruited to lend their expertise to understanding and containing the spill. Dr Judith McDowell, Senior Scientist at the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institute, is coordinating the Woods Hole Gulf Oil Spill response effort and will present information on the immediate effects of the spill, efforts to contain the spill and plans for future studies.

Jan. 26 - Restoration on the Half-shell: Oyster Reef Restoration Lessons from Wellfleet Bay – Could We Do It Here? Kate Killerlain Morrison, The Nature Conservancy and Mark Faherty, Mass Audubon Wellfleet Bay Sanctuary

In 2007, Mass Audubon's Wellfleet Bay Wildlife Sanctuary, The Nature Conservancy (TNC), National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA), and the Town of Wellfleet partnered to launch the first oyster reef restoration project in Massachusetts. Oyster reefs are critical to marine ecosystems but a recent TNC report documented an 85 percent loss of oyster reefs worldwide, greater than any other major marine habitat. Join TNC and Wellfleet Bay Audubon Sanctuary scientists as they introduce us to TNC's nation-wide efforts to restore oyster reefs, what they have learned so far from the Wellfleet Bay Oyster Reef Restoration Project, and discuss considerations for selecting potential oyster restoration sites here on the South Shore – perhaps even in the North River!

Feb. 2 - Weather Lore, Weather Reality – Don McCasland, Blue Hill Observatory Science Center

Red Sky at night, six weeks of winter, wooly caterpillars. After a sunny Ground Hog Day, how many years was it cold and snowy or warm and drier? Are there any truths to these old expressions? Join Don McCasland of Blue Hill Observatory Science Center and learn how professional meteorologists and weather observers perceive the weather lore expressions. He will draw on 126 years of weather observations to tell us if any of them hold true.

Feb. 9 - Marine Wildlife of Stellwagen Bank – Carol "Krill" Carson, Captain John Boats

Join Carol "Krill" Carson, marine biologist, for a presentation on the unique marine wildlife that live and feed in the waters of the Stellwagen Bank National Marine Sanctuary. This cold water sanctuary is just off the coast of New England and attracts a wide variety of coastal marine wildlife including endangered marine mammals such as humpback whale, North Atlantic right whales, harbor seals and gray seals. Large coastal fish also feed in these productive waters including the giant bluefin tuna, basking sharks, great white sharks and ocean sunfish.

Feb. 16 - Scenes From BP Oil Spill: A First-Hand Look at the Oil Spill – Shawn Carey, Migration Productions

Haven't you wanted to hear about the Gulf oil spill from someone who's actually been there? Wildlife photographer Shawn Carey shares firsthand accounts, images and video from a recent trip to the Louisiana coast to witness and document the effects of the nation's largest oil spill on the region and its wildlife. Find out what he observed regarding the impacts of this environmental disaster and efforts underway to fix the damage. Carey also discusses the risks facing the huge number of fall migrants heading south to the Gulf region.

Feb. 23 - Scituate Light – Shining for 200 Years – Bob Gallagher, Scituate Historical Society

Scituate Light turns 200 years old in 2011, making it one of the oldest light stations in the United States. In fact, when taken in total, the entire complex - including the original keeper's house and other buildings - is the oldest of its kind on the continent. It's been through the burning of Scituate Harbor by British troops in the War of 1812, deactivation in deference to the construction and lighting of Minot's Light in 1860, and the wreck of the Etrusco. Bob Gallagher, Keeper of Scituate Light, will tell of the many reasons the Scituate Historical Society will celebrate the light's bicentennial in 2011.

March 2 - Our Changing Coastline: Formation, Evolution and Future – Jim O'Connell, Coastal Geologist

Why is your beach sandy or rocky or narrower or wider than you remember? Join Jim O'Connell Coastal Geologist as he takes a journey back in time to tell the story of the geological formation and continuing evolution of the South Shore's coastal glacial landforms, barrier beaches and coastal rivers. In particular, Jim will focus on the formation and evolution of the coastal landforms that separate the North and South Rivers from the Atlantic Ocean, including the formation of the Spit, and the dynamic barrier beaches along the South Shore. What will these landforms look like in the future and how long will they last?

March 9 - Birds on the Beach: What Can They Tell Us? – Julie Ellis, Tufts Cummings School of Veterinary Medicine

Do you like to walk the beach? Then you might be able to learn more about what you see and contribute to science! Data collected by hundreds of SEANET volunteers provides baseline information about bird mortality and helps to detect mass mortality events such as oil spills, algal toxins, and disease outbreaks. If you like to walk on the beach, come learn more about the SEANET project including requirements of volunteers and survey protocols…no need to be an experienced birder! Volunteer supplies and SEANET t-shirts will be available at the presentation.

March 16 - Mile-A-Minute Invasives – Tim Simmons and Bryan Connolly, Natural Heritage and Endangered Species Program

It seems like a year can't pass without news breaking of a new invasive species arriving in Massachusetts. These species crowd out native species and reek havoc on our native ecosystems. Mile-a-minute, Hydrilla, Porcelain Berry, Giant Hogweed, and Kudzu will be among the invaders to be discussed and are early detection species…which means there is still time to stop them from becoming a permanent part of our landscape. Learn how to identify them, where to look for them, what to do about it when you detect a new occurrence and how and why these invasions are happening.

March 23 - A Fish in Troubled Waters – Fate of the Atlantic Herring – Greg Wells, Herring Alliance Pew Environment Group

This lecture will expose you to a threat to New England's coastal waters that has gone largely unnoticed for too long: the mismanagement of our Atlantic herring, a cousin to the more locally known river herring. Over the past decade a fleet of industrial scale fishing vessels has dramatically expanded its operations in the region and now catches well over 150 million pounds of herring annually. Because herring form the cornerstone of the marine ecosystem—feeding whales, seabirds, striped bass, tuna and numerous other predators, the ecological reverberations of such intense fishing pressure spreads far and wide. If you like to eat fish then you won't want to miss this important lecture on the Atlantic herring a keystone species that is being overfished by industrial-scale trawlers.

Search for school leader underway

Busy month ahead for screening committee

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

"Personally I think we want the best candidate so we should be fairly open minded in regard to a salary range."
— Vice Chairman Alfred Slanetz, School Committee

The superintendent screening committee has embarked on its intensive month-long role of narrowing down a batch of school superintendent candidates.

This week they received two training sessions to familiarize themselves with their role and responsibilities. Throughout the month of January 13 members of the school community will meet and interview several potential candidates (see sidebar for list of screening committee members).

At the School Committee meeting last week search consultant Joanne Rys of NESDEC said the district had received 22 completed applications for the superintendent position. She said that size applicant pool was fairly typical.

"There is a wide range of backgrounds: principals, current superintendents, assistant superintendents, central office staff," Rys said, adding most of the candidates were from the New England area.

The primary responsibility of the screening committee is to narrow the candidate field to three to five finalists for the School Committee to interview. The School Committee is the sole authority when it comes to hiring the superintendent.

Snow piles up, again

Hundreds lose power, schools close

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

If the past three weeks are an indication of what's in store for the winter 2011 everyone should go get another shovel and gallons of sand and salt.

This week, once again, the region got pummeled with about a foot of heavy, wet snow. The backbreaking snow fell steadily most of the day with some rain/snow mix, especially along the coast.

Many in the Cohasset community were subject to power outages on Wednesday. In the morning, Police Chief Mark DeLuca said the dispatch center was fielding dozens of calls concerned downed limbs and trees, as well as downed wires.

Around 8a.m. a tree had fallen directly across Route 3A. DPW came out to cut the tree up and move it off to the side as not to impede traffic and plowing, DeLuca said.

By 1:30p.m. a Connect-CTY call went out to homes to report more than 1,400 Cohasset homes were without Cohasset High 2004 graduate Frannie Noble shared information about her experience working in Kenya as the Flying Kites Oasis Program Manager at a presentation at the Balance Studio last Friday night.

From Cohasset to Kenya

CHS grad is making a difference

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

In a part of Africa where some of the worst conditions exist for children, Cohasset High School Class of 2004 grad Frannie Noble is working to make a difference.

The 25-year-old spent the better part of 2010 in Nairobi, Kenya working closely with more than a dozen orphanages as the manager of the Flying Kites Oasis Program. The Oasis program is connecting orphanages to each other and to the resources they need.

Noble has traveled to Africa three times in the last five years. In college, she did volunteer work and an internship in Mali. In the summer of 2009 she spent three months in three different countries in Africa. She spent one month each volunteering in Ethiopia, Kenya and Tanzania.

"I gained an understanding of what good things are happening in an area where negative things are usually portrayed," Noble said.

In 2010, she headed back to Kenya for an extended stay. Over the course of the past few weeks while home for the holidays, Noble has made several presentations to local groups, including middle school students. She shared those good things and not so great things and what people in the US can do to help.

The Flying Kites Oasis program aims to provide Kenyan orphanages with a business model they can utilize to operate more effectively and increase the level of care they provide to their children. By bringing an element of collaboration and the capability of a collective voice, they are working to make a difference in the lives of hundreds of children.

Cohasset Mariner 'drop box'

The Cohasset Mariner has a "drop box" and pickup location at Tedeschi's in the village. The drop box is on the counter in the front window around the corner to the left after you enter the front door.

The Mariner picks up at 8 a.m. on Mondays and Tuesdays. The drop box can be used to drop off glossy photographs, letters, flyers or other editorial copy.

Winter update for DPW

Cohasset DPW reminds residents that a sand and salt mixture is available in the upper corner of the town parking lot.

When snow is forecast, residents are asked to not park on streets plowed by the town to expedite snow removal. Vehicles that obstruct snow removal operations will be towed at the owner's expense. Residents and contractors are reminded not to move snow, ice or water onto roadways that may impede traffic.

The town is not responsible for damage to mailboxes, driveway aprons, walkways, stone walls, grassed areas, shrubs, trees or fences that fall within the town layout.

POLICE BEAT

Car crashes have been adding up

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

MV crashes

• At 3:20 p.m. on Monday (Jan. 3), police responded to a report of an accident in the Post Office parking lot on Ripley Road. A witness provided the plate number of a 2008 Ford Escape that had reportedly backed into an unoccupied 1998 Toyota Corolla causing minor damage and left. Police ran the plate and then talked to the 63-year-old owner of the Ford who did not realize he had tapped the other car, which was owned by a postal worker from Plympton, police said. The car owners planned to handle the matter on their own.

• At 5:59 p.m. on Monday (Jan. 3) there was a four-car, chain-reaction accident on King Street by Sunrise Assisted Living. Police said there was a line of three cars stopped to allow a vehicle to come out of the Sunrise driveway when they were rear-ended by a 2008 Jeep Comanche, operated by a 28-year-old Norwell man. Police said the Jeep careened in to the back of the third car in the line, causing the chain reaction. There were no reported injuries and the Jeep had to be towed, police said.

• At 7:23 p.m. on Friday (Jan. 7) a caller reported when she came out after eating at a restaurant on King Street someone had hit her 2010 Honda Civic parked in the parking lot on the rear, driver's side bumper. She reported the incident to police for insurance purposes.

• At 1:56 p.m. on Saturday (Jan. 8), there was a two-vehicle accident at the lights at Stop & Shop. Police said a 45-year-old Cohasset woman was traveling south on Route 3A in a 1999 Jeep Cherokee when witnesses said a 2002 Ford Taurus, operated by a 58-yaer-old Cohasset man, coming out of upper King Street tried to beat the light and hit the Jeep broadside. The Jeep had to be towed. There were no reported injuries. The man driving the Taurus was cited for a red light violation, based on witness statements.

Taking photos

A Nichols Road woman reporting that her babysitter said a man was taking pictures of her house was advised to call police if he returns. The report came in at about 3:21 p.m. on Monday (Jan. 3). Police said while it is not illegal to take photographs of a house as long as the photographer is on public property, people should call if they notice any suspicious activity.

Punching vehicle

Police responded to a call from a 34-year-old Hull man who was doing work at the location at 7:29 p.m. on Monday (Jan. 3). The caller said he was attempting to turn around in a driveway on Highland Avenue when the neighbor started punching the side of his truck. The men had settled the matter on their own by the time police arrived.

Pocket dialing

A 50-year-old Rustic Drive woman went to police headquarters to report having received four "open-ended" calls on her landline telephone, meaning no one responds when the call is answered. The caller ID showed a cell phone number that she was unfamiliar with.

An officer called the number and investigation revealed the caller was a friend of her son's. What had happened was the caller had programmed the landline into his cell phone and the automatic dial was activated while the cell phone was in his pocket because the keyboard was not locked. The annoying calls were inadvertent, police said.

OUI arrest

Police responded to a 9-1-1 call from Linden Drive at 1:11 a.m. on Saturday (Jan. 8). The caller said a motor vehicle had crashed in her yard and was now on its side. Police responded and found a 1998 Jeep Grand Cherokee on its side; the operator, a 19-year-old Cohasset man who was showing signs and symptoms of intoxication, was taken to South Shore Hospital with minor injuries, police said. The teen was later bailed and charged with operating under the influence of alcohol, negligent operation, failure to stay in marked lanes and speeding. Police said the accident occurred near a sharp corner on Linden Drive. The Jeep had to be towed and is likely totaled, police said.

Summonsed

At 11:36 a.m. on Saturday (Jan. 8), an officer ran a random registry check on the plate of a 2003 Hummer H2 that was traveling south by Shaw's on Chief Justice Cushing Highway (Route 3A). The computer revealed the registration had been revoked due to nonpayment of insurance. The vehicle was being operated by a 47-year-old Florida man who checked out. The owner of the car, a 45-year-old Scituate woman, was issued a criminal citation to appear in court for allowing the operation of an unregistered and uninsured motor vehicle, police said.

Summonsed

At 12:35 p.m. on Saturday (Jan. 8), an officer was on patrol on Beechwood Street when he observed a 1998 Mercury Villager go through the Beechwood/Doane Street stop sign without stopping. The officer pulled the vehicle over and a computer check revealed the operator's license expired last May. The operator, a 51-year-old Hanover man, was issued a criminal citation to appear in court on the charges of unlicensed operation and failure to stop at a stop sign.

Littering

A resident of Forest Avenue called police on Saturday (Jan. 8) at about 1:16 p.m. after observing a car full of teens toss something out the window of their 2001 Honda Civic and pull into a common driveway off Forest Avenue. The caller provide the plate number; an officer caught up with the car and the operator took responsibility for the littering and picked the wrapper up.

Altercation

A resident notified police after seeing a bicyclist and a motorist in a verbal altercation on Cedar Street on Saturday (Jan. 8) at about 2:49 p.m. Police said the snow made the roadway smaller and the man on the bicycle was upset that the car had come too close to him. There were words back and forth but, police said, the two ended up apologizing to each other and there were no further problems.

Cohasset PD joins Facebook

"It's a great tool to get information to the community."
— Chief Mark DeLuca

The Cohasset Police are everywhere. The cruisers are on the street. Officers walk in the village. And now residents can find the police department on the social network, Facebook.

Over the weekend the Cohasset Police Department became a part of the Facebook world. In a short few days they have gained more than 100 fans.

"(Through Facebook) seems to be the way people are communicating these days – the young, the old, the indifferent," said Police Chief Mark DeLuca. "It's a great tool to get information to the community."

DeLuca said he envisions using Facebook to relay information about storms, upcoming programs and, really, anything going on within the department.

Although the page is still in its infancy it already has dozens of photos and several updates. An event the police department is hosting — an Elder Affairs pasta lunch — is listed on the site as well.

The Facebook page also includes information on the multiple means to contact the department. It includes information in the "discussion" section on how to obtain a firearms license, how to contact the members of the police community liaison board, and how to sign up for the police department's e-mail blast system.

"We hope it is used responsibly on the other end as well. People can send us information and feedback. It will help make us more effective and efficient," DeLuca said.

Although the police department is venturing into the latest technology it does not replace the tried and true methods of contact. The Facebook page should not be used to report a crime or to give the police tips. If emergency assistance is needed, call 9-1-1 or 781-383-1212.

Cohasset man faces third OUI charge

During Wednesday's snowstorm (Jan. 12), at about 5:45pm, Cohasset Police responded to calls reporting a hit and run crash at the intersection of Sohier and North Main streets. The victim of the hit and run, a 45-year-old Cohasset man, reported that his 2006 Honda Pilot had been struck on the drivers' side and front bumper by a man that was passing cars on the wrong side of Sohier Street in a 2006 Toyota Scion.

Cohasset officers en route to the accident scene spotted the Toyota Scion fleeing the area of North Main Street. The officers attempted to stop the car, but the driver would not yield to the cruiser's lights and siren. The operator of the Toyota Scion, who was later identified as Clifford E. Chase, 55, of 17 Highland Court, was arrested outside of his home after failing sobriety tests. He was charged with: operating under the influence of liquor (third offense); leaving the scene of a motor vehicle crash after causing property damage; and failure to stop for a police officer. There were no injuries reported at the crash scene.

Cohasset Police Lt. William Quigley said that "Mr. Chase's actions yesterday put a lot of people in danger. I'm glad our officers were able to safely stop him before he seriously injured someone."

Chase was held overnight at the Cohasset Police station on $10,000 cash bail. He was arraigned in Quincy District Court on Thursday, Jan. 13.

Town technology needs on the table

One of the items interim Town Manager Steve Lombard is digging into is the software and hardware needs of the town.

First on the list for needed updates is the town's financial and accounting software.

"The one we have now is limited…and cumbersome," Lombard said. The software has been serving the town for more than 15 years.

Lombard is developing a phased plan to update the town's technology and will present it to the Capital Budget Committee in the coming months leading up to Town Meeting.

There are many software options out there, but Lombard said the challenge is finding the right one to suit the town. A basis package could be purchased and then added to as the budget allows in the coming years.

For Michele, one of the greatest advances in cancer care has been the one on the South Shore.

When Michele needed treatment for breast cancer, she was thankful that she could receive world-renowned care at Dana-Farber/Brigham and Women's Cancer Center in clinical affiliation with South Shore Hospital. And she had confidence knowing that our specialists, focused on cancer, were providing the expert care she needed. But she also found something more: how important it was to be treated in a place that not only cared for her cancer, but also for her life.

"It's a place filled with hope," said Michele. And having all the integrated services she needed close to home helped her maintain a sense of normalcy through her treatments. "With two small kids, I don't know how I would have managed otherwise," she explained. "Having this level of cancer care on the South Shore — it means everything to me."

Committee needs to come to a conclusion on is the salary range for the next superintendent. Current superintendent Denise Walsh received a salary of $167,501 in fiscal 2011 (current year).

At the crux of the discussion was balancing the budget restraints with the desire to attract a high quality candidate.

"Personally I think we want the best candidate so we should be fairly open minded in regard to a salary range," said vice chair Alfred Slanetz. "There's a budget, but there's also being competitive."

Rys advised the committee to keep the range differential around $10,000, "the larger the range there is harder it is to negotiate."

The starting point is typically what the current superintendent is being compensated. Rys said determining the salary is key for potential candidates.

"Candidates want to know the salary ahead of time to make sure (going through the application process) is worth their time," Rys said.

School Committee member Jeanne Astino proposed a salary range of $165,000 to $175,000, with potential for other benefits for more experience.

Not all School Committee members were ready to agree to this range. Several members wanted to see a comparison to other school districts and their superintendent salaries/benefits.

Rys said the Massachusetts Association of School Committees compiles this type of information annually.

The information will be gathered and the discussion continued at the Jan. 19 School Committee meeting.

Who is on the screening committee?

A total of 11 residents will serve on the superintendent screening committee, which held its first two meetings this week. The screening committee is charged with evaluating the applicant pool, conducting first round interviews and narrowing the field to three to five finalists for the School Committee to consider.

The committee draws from various segments of the community and constituent groups. The School Committee member on the screening committee is Jeanne Astino. Each of the school council chose a representative. Molly Conetta will represent Osgood, Marjorie Murphy from a Deer Hill and Trish Morse from the middle high school. The PSO chose its president Jenni Milanoski to represent them. The Cohasset Education Foundation chose Mary McGoldrick, president of the CEF. The Board of Selectmen representative is Ted Carr. Special Education Parent Advisory Committee president Diane Herth will represent that group. Cohasset Teachers Association will be represented by middle school social studies teacher Cynthia Gordon and Deer Hill grade five teacher Karin Johnston. Business manager Dave DeGennaro and Deer Hill Principal Jennifer deChiara will represent the school administration. Community representative is Diane Benson.

Cohasset Schools, like many others across Massachusetts, cancelled school the night before the storm before a flake had fallen. Town Hall was closed for the day as well.

While many businesses and companies shut down for the day public safety departments and DPW geared up for one of their busiest days.

DeLuca said there is constant communication between the department heads during a storm event. Emergency response, DPW, Elder Affairs, police, fire and town manager all stay in touch during the day to ensure all bases are being covered.

There was minimal flooding in Cohasset mainly because the high tide did not occur during the height of the storm.

Due to the snowstorm the Planning Board continued all its scheduled business for Wednesday night's meeting to a later date. The Planning Board intended to begin deliberation on the Turkey Hill wind turbine application on Wednesday night. The deliberation will now take place at 8p.m. on Wednesday, Jan. 26.

A public hearing was also scheduled this past Wednesday on an application to modify the 1983 residential cluster development special permit at 100 Pond St. The public hearing was continued to Jan. 26 at 7:30p.m.

Future of Ripley Road condo project still undetermined

Process is now spanning years

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

"At this point we should be kicking this thing into higher gear – more submissions, more evaluations, more information."
— Woody Chittick, Zoning Board of Appeals

For the many who are involved or have followed the 40-B project proposal at 25 Ripley Road the process has seemed never ending. Monday night brought the latest installment on what has become a saga for the applicant and the interested neighborhood.

At hand is a proposal to create seven condominium units (11 bedrooms total) out of the current 2,200 square foot, single family home owned by Cohasset resident Will Charles. Three units will have one-bedroom and four will have two-bedrooms.

At the crux of the application is a set of site plans. An updated set had been submitted, but the zoning board wanted further changes reflected in the plans. The decision on whether to grant the application for a comprehensive permit is up to the zoning board.

Zoning board chairman Woody Chittick said a stamped site plan by a licensed engineer is desired. He also asked for certification that the proposed project is in compliance with ADA regulations.

"Right now we're in a limbo stage where nobody seems responsible," Chittick said. The current plans were designed and stamped by an architect and civil engineer who are no longer working on the project. Since then some changes have been made to the plan by others that the former professionals may not stand behind.

Zoning board members pointed out several existing structures shown on the plans that are not intended to be part of the renovated building. They asked for those types of corrections on a new set of revised plans.

"It's like we're looking for Colonel Mustard in the drawing room with the candlestick. The plans will have to be properly noted or redrawn," Chittick said.

A group of neighbors have hired Boston attorney Daniel Hill to represent them. He submitted a long list of items that the zoning board should address and request before moving forward. He said the applicant has "not complied, or even come close to complying" with the Housing Appeals remand requirements.

"It's a mystery to me it's taken seven months to get here," Hill said. He talked to issues with the septic system, the thus far inconsistent plans and lack of certified architect/engineer on the project, and lack of drainage calculations.

Lastly, Hill questioned the very eligibility of the project for state subsidy funding. In 2008, property owner Will Charles and the project received preliminary approval for state funding. Since then things at the state level and for the applicant has changed. For example, in April 2010 Charles filed for bankruptcy and there were several other instances of a change in financial situation. Hill asked the board to consider seeking an answer from the state on whether the project would still be eligible for funding.

Relatedly, two Cohasset properties owned by Charles (25 Ripley Road and 247 Forest Ave.) have recently been listed for sale on MLS (an international real estate website) with the listing agent as Charles. The 25 Ripley Road listings are for the future condominiums, permission for which is currently being sought before the zoning board. The listing prices for the condos range from $499,000 to $470,000.

Chittick said the board should see a new site plan, reflecting changes to the parking configuration, drainage calculations, septic system approval and information on the trash receptacle location to be ironed out by the next meeting.

"At this point we should be kicking this thing into higher gear – more submissions, more evaluations, more information," Chittick said.

Marcus Charles, the son of Will Charles, asked the zoning board if it was typical for an application to take so long to get to a decision.

Chittick said he couldn't really speak to "normal" as each application was different, but the application needed more information in order for the board to come to a decision on the project.

"We need to consider more information, better information…I'd love to have (the information) in hand today; I'm not eager to see this go on and on," Chittick said.

Charles said he hoped to create a project the town could be proud of, "I'm here to work with the boards, work with the neighbors…I didn't come here to bring this town down."

Charles also read a letter of endorsement for the project from Stephen Lucitt of 579 Jerusalem Road, a former member of the Housing Partnership Committee.

Ripley Road history in brief

The proposal has been in the works for more than three years. Property owner and Cohasset resident Will Charles purchased the home in June 2007 with this project in mind. The Zoning Board of Appeals began considering a comprehensive permit for the project in 2009 and spent the first part of the year holding hearings on the project. Ultimately the zoning board denied the project's application after months of hearings, largely due to a lack of evidence.

Charles appealed the denial to the state's Housing Appeals Committee and that body remanded the application back to the zoning board with some very specific requirements for more information.

Two of the units will be deemed "affordable" by state standards. The inclusion of these two units allows the entire project to be possible under Chapter 40-B, the state's affordable housing law. Under Chapter 40-B towns with less than 10 percent housing stock are vulnerable to housing projects that can be approved under flexible zoning rules.

The Planning Board recently recommended denial of the application largely due to the lack of information.

Speaking up about women's health

Cohasset native raises awareness about post-partum depression

By Nancy White

COURTESY PHOTO

For the past 10 years, Sheila Sullivan has spent hundreds of hours conducting independent research to uncover the cause of postpartum depression.

A Cohasset native has been invited to present her research at an international health conference in London in March. But, this women's health advocate is not a doctor or a medical professional.

Sheila Sullivan, currently of Hull, is simply a passionate woman looking to change the way the medical community and women themselves are diagnosed and treated. Her focus, which was generated in part from her own personal experiences, is postpartum depression and postpartum psychosis.

For the past 10 years, Sullivan has spent hundreds of hours conducting independent research to uncover the cause of postpartum depression. She's read over 500 books written by medical professionals, visited hundreds of websites, had conversations with dozens of medical authors and experts and spoke to hundreds of women everywhere she goes.

As someone who has done the research and had personal experience she believes she has come to a profound understanding of the condition and its causes.

The First World Congress of Obstetrics, Gynecology and Andrology is scheduled for mid-March and has given her the opportunity to present her research in an oral presentation. Sullivan, who has recently gone back to college to pursue an associate's degree in Natural Sciences, is looking to raise money to get to London for the conference.

"It's my greatest hope that this will begin a much needed change in the backward thinking regarding postpartum depression and psychosis," Sullivan said. "This is an extraordinary opportunity for me…I hope in going to the conference I find psychologists like thinking and support for my cause."

In her research paper, she argues that there is a strong connection between hormonal imbalances and female brain. Specifically, she looks at the inter-relation between hormonal imbalance, trauma and memory. She also advocates for the use of base line hormone levels to be used as a first line diagnostic tool in the onset of postpartum depression and psychosis.

"Because of a lack of research (in this area) women are suffering unnecessarily," Sullivan said. "(I want) to bring a new understanding that lead to the proper treatment of women experiencing these conditions."

For several years Sullivan has written a blog on her research and thoughts (www.postpartumawareness.com).

"I feel the most effective way to reach women in this country is to speak at women's events and by speaking to young women in college and high school," said Sullivan, adding she is concerned working class and poor women are not getting the information they need to make informed decisions about their health and treatment.

"The perception of these conditions (postpartum depression and psychosis) being mental illnesses needs to change, as this prevents many women from seeking out help they need because of fear of losing their babies," said Sullivan.

Sullivan believes, and cites medical research, postpartum depression can be effectively treated with 17 Beta Estradiol, the main estrogen women produce from puberty to post menopause. There are currently physicians and compounding pharmacies treating postpartum depression with these bioidentical hormones. Her ultimate hope is more doctors and the medical community as a whole will begin to recognize the effectiveness of this treatment method.

"It's an incredible honor to be invited. It just goes to show if you believe in yourself and believe in what your body and mind are telling you then you can find truth in healing. When I started this research 10 years ago I never thought I'd be here. It's been a journey," Sullivan said.

Sullivan will continue to network with medical professionals and women's health advocacy groups to see that changes are made.

"This can be a lonely road sometimes as I am the only women in the country that is advocating for the kind of changes and bring a new understanding to these conditions," Sullivan said.

To find out more about Sullivan and her research, visit www.postpartumawareness.com, send an e-mail to sheilasullivan1@yahoo.com or call 617-820-7826. She is also seeking financial help to get to the London health conference. Contact her to find out how you can help.

Running for the pantry

Taking on Boston Marathon challenge

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

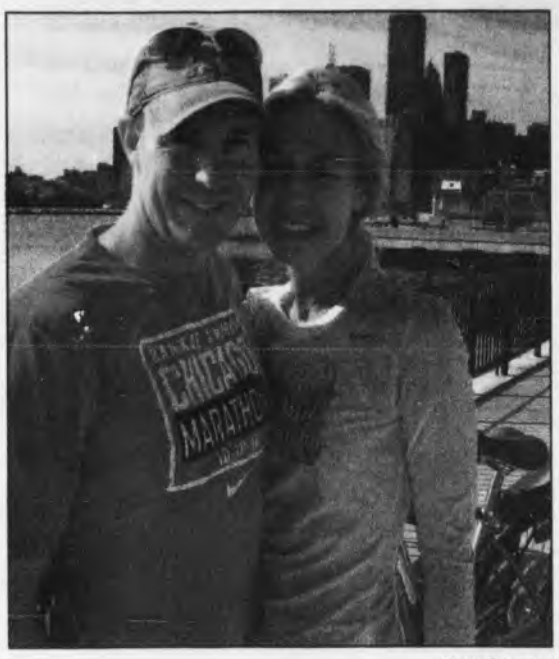
On April 18, a local man will run 26.2-miles from Hopkinton to Boston in support of the Cohasset Food Pantry and the families and individuals they serve.

Matt Hendison, a current part-time and future full-time Cohasset resident, will race as an official runner in the 2011 Boston Marathon. He and Cohasset resident Trish Hart have made the commitment to the pantry to raise at least $3,000.

"This is the first time the pantry has had the opportunity to be a part of the marathon," said pantry co-director Jane Corry. They received the official Boston Marathon number through a Cohasset connection. "We're very excited."

Corry said the money raised would support the weekly operation of the food pantry. The non-denominational food pantry currently serves more than 75 families and individuals in Cohasset.

"We've received wonderful support from the community since November. We hope this will help keep momentum going and carry us through the spring," Corry said.



Corry met both Hart and Hendison at the New Year's Day Polar Plunge at Sandy Beach (see sidebar on the plunge). More than 25 people, including Hart and Hendison, jumped into the frigid waters off Cohasset in support of the pantry.

"He is a wonderful man who has run four previous marathons," Corry said on why she chose him to represent the pantry.

Although Hendison, who splits his time between Santa Monica, Calif. and Cohasset, will be doing the pounding of the pavement on Marathon Monday, Hart will very much be alongside him – literally and figuratively – during training runs and fundraising.

"We're very much doing this together," Hendison said.

Hart, who completed her first marathon, the Chicago Marathon, in the fall will accompany Hendison on many of his training runs.

COURTESY PHOTO

Matt Hendison and Trish Hart have committed to raising $3,000 for the Cohasset Food Pantry and, in conjunction, Hendison will run the Boston Marathon. The 26.2-mile trek will be Hendison's fifth marathon, but first in Boston. The couple completed the Chicago Marathon in October.

"If it's a longer run I'll go as far as I can then I'll jump on a bike," Hart said.

The couple is beginning to brainstorm on ways to raise awareness of the effort and of the food pantry.

"It's a cause that's so close to home and a charity that you know where the money goes," Hart said.

Hendison agrees, "this is a charity that touches home…it's something local and something that's needed. It's an organization that you can touch and feel."

Both Hendison and Hart see the marathon as a first step in committing to helping the food pantry well into the future.

"We want to be part of the team," Hendison said.

This is not Hendison's first foray into running for a charitable cause. He has run the Chicago Marathon to benefit his company's charity, My Gym's Challenged America Foundation, and a 10K race to raise money for the Hirshberg Foundation for Pancreatic Cancer.

Always an athlete and a runner, Hendison started doing marathons in 2006.

"It was always one of those far-reaching goals I wanted to do, especially the Boston Marathon," Hendison said. Since then he has competed in the LA Marathon and the Chicago Marathon twice each. He has already started training for April's race and planned to run a half-marathon this weekend.

"I'm always in some sort of training…I'm on track and will be working to build those miles back up," Hendison said.

Hart has lived in Cohasset for 15 years. Her two kids, Cailey, 14, and Noel, 12, attend the Cohasset Middle-High School.

Only just confirmed last week Hart and Hendison are already getting support in the community.

They have already gotten support from local businesses Mariposa Massage and Atlantic Brokerage.

"Our goal is $3,000, but we're hoping to shatter it," Hendison said.

To donate to the Cohasset Food Pantry and Matt Hendison's marathon efforts, send checks to the Cohasset Food Pantry, P.O. Box 297, Cohasset, Mass. Please note on the check it is for the marathon effort.

Support for food pantry is ongoing

The Cohasset Food Pantry was able to provide many individuals and families with the ingredients for a Christmas meal this year. Co-director of the food pantry Jane Corry said it was the first time the organization has been able to provide a special box to their clients on the Christmas holiday.

Due to the generosity of the Cohasset community the shelves at the food pantry are full. The back room is crowded with canned goods, cereal and pasta.

"It is wonderful to have food and needed items to give to our families," Corry said in an email.

Although the food pantry is in better shape than it was leading up to the holiday season, the group is still in constant need of support.

More than 50 people came out to Sandy Beach on New Year's Day to take a "polar plunge" and donate to the pantry. About 25 brave swimmers took to the frigid water. The event concluded with an SUV full of groceries and pantry items.

"It was a fantastic way to start 2011," Corry said.

The food pantry goes through the following items very quickly and therefore is in constant need of them:

- Peanut butter
- Jams and jellies
- Mayonnaise
- Ketchup
- Corned beef hash
- Beef stew
- Pancake mix
- Maple syrup
- Tylenol and Advil
- Deodorant
- Dish and laundry detergent
- Sponges
- Cleaning products
- Kid size snacks and juice cartons

EVENT PREVIEW

Celebrate the message of Dr. King

What: On Monday, Jan. 17, residents will gather at St. Stephen's Church to celebrate the life and message of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. This is the 10th year the Cohasset clergy and the Cohasset Diversity Committee have brought residents together on this day.

Who: The event is co-sponsored by the Cohasset clergy and the Cohasset Diversity Committee. All are invited.

When: Monday, Jan. 17 from 9 to 11a.m. A full breakfast will be served from 9 to 10 followed by an uplifting program honoring the memory of Dr. King. The featured speaker is documentary filmmaker, Topper Carew, an "Artist in Residence" at Trinity Church, Boston. Topper will screen his recent 14-minute film "A Dream Deferred" during his presentation entitled "We are the Keepers of Our Children."

Carew has a long history of involvement in America's Civil Rights Movement. His many activities include working in Voter Registration in Mississippi during the 1960s, organizing with the National Association of Neighborhoods, and being a Peace & Freedom Party delegate/organizer from DC in 1968 to the Democratic National Convention in Chicago (on the Robert F. Kennedy ticket, prior to his assassination).

Where: St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, 16 Highland Avenue.

Cost: The cost of the breakfast is $5 per person, $15 per family. Childcare will be provided.

Why it's important: Ten years ago the Cohasset Clergy Association and the Cohasset Diversity Committee were inspired to host their first Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Breakfast. The inspiration for the event came in 2001 when Cohasset's then METCO Coordinator, Yvonne Jones, shared her dream of Cohasset's clergy hosting a Martin Luther King, Jr. Breakfast right here in Cohasset. The first Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Breakfast was hosted by the Reverend Cliff Cutler at St Stephen's Episcopal Church. Since that year four churches, St. Stephen's, St. Anthony's, First Parish and Second Congregation, have taken turns hosting the event. Each year a special guest is invited to speak to the community.

"In honoring the memory of Dr. King we are reminded of how he asked Americans to strive for nonviolence based on agape or unconditional and forgiving love to solve seemingly irreconcilable conflicts in interpersonal and community relations," said Connie Afshar, chair of the Diversity Committee.

The featured speaker at the Martin Luther King Day Breakfast is documentary filmmaker, Topper Carew, an "Artist in Residence" at Trinity Church, Boston.

Why should you come: Afshar said all are invited and welcome at the breakfast, "the Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Breakfast, always a joyful event, celebrates the memory of this American hero through music, prayer, speech and good food!"

Historical Society talk on America's Tall Ship

The Cohasset Historical Society will present its first Wednesday night lecture of 2011 on Jan. 19th with guest speaker Dr. Harvey Dickstein and his presentation of "The Eagle". The Coast Guard training barque has a long and interesting history. It originated in Germany prior to World War II and served to teach German sailors the intricacies of mastering the sails and the sea. Today, it is know as "America's Tall Ship" and is berthed at her homeport of New London, Ct. at the Coast Guard Academy. Here, she continues to educate young cadets in the ways of the sea and traveling the world as a good-will ambassador.

The story of this ship and her journey is the topic of Dr. Dickstein's talk. As a young officer in the Public Health Service, Dr. Dickstein served as medical officer aboard the Eagle for two cruises. The program will begin at 7:30 PM at the Pratt Building, 106 South Main Street in Cohasset. All are invited to attend, there is no charge and light refreshment will be served. For additional information, call the Historical Society at 781-383-1434.

Audit report is coming soon

Town officials expect draft next week

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The draft report of the independent water and sewer department audit is expected by early next week.

The long-awaited audit should clear up a variety of questions that have come up over the last year. It could also very likely it will create new questions for the town to contend with.

Interim Town Manager Steve Lombard said he was looking to receive the draft audit report by Tuesday (Jan. 18) after the Martin Luther King, Jr. holiday. However, the audit will not appear on the Selectmen's agenda that same evening.

At this point it is unclear how the audit and its findings will be presented to the town. The Advisory Committee commissioned and paid for the audit, which makes them a vital part of the results.

A sub-committee water audit group has been meeting regularly to shepherd the audit through the process.

Advisory Committee chair Sam Wakeman said the audit will have as much information as possible, but the auditor was still finding challenges in getting some of the information he needed.

"Once we figure out when the audit is going to be ready, we'll release it to everyone at once," Wakeman said.

A more formal oral presentation of the auditor by the independent auditor John Sullivan of Melanson and Heath will be given in the next few weeks, town officials said.

"Everyone should keep in mind that we asked for an independent audit, an independent opinion. It shouldn't be re-written by us," Wakeman said. That being said town officials will have the opportunity to bring new information to light after the draft report is issues.

"Everybody will have a chance to put (his or her) two cents in," Wakeman said, adding that not everyone will agree with the auditor's report.

After the draft report is revealed, the town will have to communicate the results to the Department of Revenue. Depending on the results of the audit further action may need to be taken with the fiscal 2011 budget at a Special Town Meeting.

The town's third quarter tax bills have already been delayed as a direct result of the audit.

New board on horizon

Union members to look at health insurance

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The committee's charge will be review and make a recommendation for changes in health insurance.

One of the single biggest costs in the town's budget is health insurance. As the town begins to develop the fiscal 2012 budget, it's one of the items town officials want to look closely at.

To that end, the Board of Selectmen voted to form an Insurance Advisory Committee, as outlined in the state's general laws. The committee's charge will be review and make a recommendation for changes in health insurance.

The committee must include at least seven members from different unions within the town and one retiree. The establishment of this committee is the first step the town must take in order to make any changes to town employees' health insurance plans. The town has 11 unions and, at this time, any changes to health insurance must involve contract negotiations.

"(The committee) will look at what's out there (for options). It might not necessarily be a new product, but it might be looking at the product we have," said Steve Lombard, interim town manager.

A letter will go out to each of the town's union presidents to seek a representative from their union for the committee.

Interestingly, the committee does not include any town officials or civilians. Selectman Leland Jenkins feared this grouping would not yield results to the benefit of the town.

Yet, Lombard was more optimistic.

"We all need to work on this together, cooperatively to reduce costs," Lombard said.

After the committee is formed it will have approximately 90 days to develop a recommendation for the Selectmen. Then, any changes to health insurance would still have to be negotiated through the unions.

Norfolk County real estate report

A positive turn in the market shows that while the number of commercial and residential sales remained level from 2009, 2010 saw the average price for both commercial and residential sales increase by 13 percent. The total volume of real estate sales in Norfolk County for the annual period from January through December 2010 reached $4.4 billion, an 8 percent increase from January through December 2009. Total mortgage value for 2010 stood at $20.5 billion, a decline of 23 percent from 2009. The refinancing of existing mortgages by homeowners in Norfolk County was driven in part by low interest rates during 2010. Mortgage foreclosures remained a concern with 2010 seeing a marked increase in the amount of foreclosure deeds filed. Given past year's moratoriums on home foreclosures this increase may indicate an adjustment in the market. Still, Norfolk County Registry of Deeds, in an effort to provide the public with secure, accurate, and accessible records on this issue of importance, implemented a change in its document indexing system on Nov. 1, 2010, that allows Registry users to specifically track foreclosure notices sent to homeowners.

Norfolk County Registry of Deeds, 649 High St., Dedham, is the principal office for real property in Norfolk County. The Registry's online index is available from 1937 forward and continues to expand to include earlier records. For more information, call 781-461-6101 or visit the website at www.norfolkdeeds.org.

S.S. Community Center meeting set for Jan. 25

In accordance with Article V, Section I of the bylaws, notice is hereby given to the members of the South Shore Community Center Inc. that the annual meeting will take place at 6:30 p.m., on Tuesday, Jan. 25, at 3 North Main St., Cohasset. Only active members shall be entitled to vote.

DTC movie night is Jan. 21.

The Cohasset Democratic Town Committee's next "movie night" will feature the 1939 Frank Capra film, "Mr. Smith goes to Washington."

James Stewart plays the part of Jefferson Smith, a senator appointed to fill the term of a deceased senator. Senator Smith is a wide-eyed optimist who threatens to resign when he is falsely accused by the media for stealing funds from a philanthropic organization. His patriotic zeal is renewed as he fights to work on a bill to support a national boy's camp. Smith engages in a climactic filibuster, declaring, "I've got a few things to say to this body." "And, as a matter of fact, I'm not gonna leave this body until I do get them said." Come see how this comedy/drama compares to the practices of our Congress today.

The film will be shown at the Paul Pratt Library on Jan. 21, at 7 p.m. in the Meeting Room. All are welcome. Refreshments are served.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Applause for audit

Much of Cohasset waits on bated breath for the town's contracted independent auditor to release his draft report on the Water Department. According to town officials, the report is expected to be in the hands of town officials and available to the public next week.

The audit process has taken significantly longer than expected as the independent auditor John Sullivan of Melanson Heath & Company has had to unravel the tangled web of finances within the Water Department. He began working on the audit back in the early fall with an expected completion date in November. Obviously that didn't happen. In recent meetings, he has recounted the efforts he has taken to track down invoices and go deep into the department's finances to get the answers he felt he needed.

We applaud Sullivan and his team's efforts on behalf of the Town of Cohasset and look forward to reading his report and commend the Advisory Committee for seeking an audit of the water department. The Water Audit Group, too, should be mentioned for helping Sullivan work through challenges and ensuring the audit remained as independent as possible.

What will come as a result of the audit, of course, remains to be seen. The Cohasset Mariner has been diligent in reporting on the progression of the audit as discussions took place in public meetings over the past few months. Yet at each meeting, it was clear steadfast conclusions were yet to be drawn and many questions remained.

Knowing Cohasset, it is almost assured not everyone will agree with Sullivan's findings, but the independent audit is a strong starting point to begin a greater discussion on the future of the Water Department.

The audit not only looked at the financials of the department, including the multi-million Little Harbor project, but also the organization and management of the department itself.

We hope town officials examine the audit and its findings carefully and make appropriate changes. We hope residents take part and speak up as the discussion on the Water Department continues in the months to come.

The audit may not answer all the town's questions and certainly it won't solve all the problems, but it will be the best tool the town has at this point to get the Water Department headed in the right direction.

Heartfelt appreciation from Lappen family

TO THE EDITOR:

To the citizens of Cohasset:

Eddie and I moved to Cohasset 30 years ago with great plans to continue our lives together in a place that was beautiful, friendly, and close to family, friends and work. For the past 30 years, many of our dreams and aspirations came true. We met many new friends, got involved in the community and raised our two children, Ross and Mia. Then tragedy struck. We lost our Eddie in a horrible accident in Vermont. The citizens of Cohasset responded in an unbelievable outpouring of compassion, warmth and generosity. For this kindness, my family and I will be forever grateful.

You, the citizens of Cohasset, have taken some of the pain out of our hearts and replaced it with love and warmth. In some of your own struggles to make sense out of this tragedy, Ross, Mia and I plan to be there for you, just as you have been there for us.

Bless all of you.

Still time to sign the pledge

Did you sign the pledge?

If not, there is still time and opportunity to ensure you are a part of this town-wide movement to stand up against all types of bullying and foster kindness.

The Cohasset Coalition for a Caring Community is looking to raise the consciousness in the community surrounding the issue of bullying. The pledge asks for a commitment to promote respect for differences and basis rights and dignity for all. It also calls for an end to behavior that's hurtful to others (see full language below).

More than simply focusing on prevention, the pledge is a way to encourage the community to be more aware of their words and actions in everyday situations. The organizers said it's about approaching people in a positive way and with kindness.

There are many opportunities for members of the community to sign the pledge. With every pledge signed a 'Skipper' blue bracelet with the phrase "I signed the pledge" will be handed out. The pledge is available at four locations: Town Hall Recreation Department, Dependable Cleaners in the village, Good Sport on Route 3A, and the South Shore Community Center. The cut-off pledge in this paper can be brought to any of those locations as well.

Students and school staff will be signing the pledge during school hours next week. Local churches are also involved in the pledge signing.

A friendly face at Hajj Auto Care

COMMENTARY

JOAN KOVACH

Jonathan Simonton died on Saturday, Nov. 28, at Mass General Hospital at the young age of 53.

The old Volvo had a tune up at Hajj Auto Care and was running well, but the mileage was getting worse.

"It's just dumping gas," Jonathan said scratching his unshaven chin. "Needs a new sensor. But you know, there is something I'd like to try."

"What's that?"

"I did it once in a Jaguar. Worked pretty good. You get a universal sensor and try to fit it in."

"What's that gonna set me back?" I asked cautiously. It's so hard to know when to stop putting money in a 16-year-old car.

"Awe you're a good customer. I'll do it for $200."

"Labor?"

"Labor included. I'd like to try and see if it works."

At 12 mpg my commute was running twice that cost a month. And I liked to think of something that worked on a Jaguar helping my old red sedan.

"OK, let's do it," I agreed. I left the car at the station across from French Memories and hoped for the best.

Jonathan had been looking badly lately. Just before Thanksgiving his wife had died. She had been ill, struggling to get her health back when Jonathan met her 10 years ago, and he helped her recover. They lived together in Quincy for those 10 years but then cancer came and took her. And now, he missed her terribly. It was the gas station where he brought and shared his grief. He kept on working, and began to prepare for another trip to Virginia.

Jonathan was originally from Virginia where he worked with his dad in the field of auto repair. He met Hajj Zaidan three years ago when he applied for a job as a mechanic at Shore Taxi where the elder Zaidan was chief mechanic. Zaidan couldn't use him in Quincy but knew he was right for the service center he and his family ran in Cohasset so he brought him on board there.

Jonathan went ahead and ordered the part for my car, a universal sensor that cost about $40, as compared to a new Volvo sensor that would run around $400. I learned later from Ali that the part had to be adapted to fit my car. Jonathan had to make a new plug from the old sensor and fit it to the new one to make it work on the old Volvo. That was the craftsman part, the challenge that Jonathan was excited to try.

I reclaimed the car and began to carefully document the gas mileage to see if this idea of Jonathan's was a folly.

With the first tank, I was already getting 18 miles to the gallon. By the second it was up to 22. I wrote a note to thank Jonathan and let him know about the success of the operation. I left it at the station. It was a few days later that I learned that he wouldn't ever see my note.

Jonathan Simonton died on Saturday, Nov. 28, at Mass General Hospital at the young age of 53.

Back at the station, the Zaidan family has been very sad. "I worked side by side with him every day for three years," said Ali Zaidan, station manager. "Many mornings I still expect him to walk in the door. Sometimes somebody walks in and I hear them, and I think it's him, and I call his name. Then I remember he is gone. I am so sad. His shift was 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. but he would come in at 7 and we would talk. I miss him so much!"

"He brought many years of experience, especially with cars like Mercedes and Jags. He was a good man and a good friend. He would correct my English when we talked. We were friends like that," said Ali. "My father and he were friends too and would talk a lot. We all miss him."

"It was the diabetes and heart trouble that took him," said Hajj Zaidan. "Whatever I can say about what a good man he was, it will not be enough," he continued. "Just like our family, his was a family of auto mechanics. Jonathan and his dad worked together at a Mercedes Benz repair shop in Virginia. Just a few months ago he took a trip to see his father in Virginia. He hadn't seen him in about seven years. And now he was planning to go again."

After the funeral, Jonathan's family brought his tools to the station and gave them to the Zaidan family, Hajj and his sons Ali, Mohammed, Ahmed and his stepson, Sean Cox. They continue their work at the station, every day remembering and missing Jonathan.

FOR THE RECORD

GREGORY MATHIS

Everyone needs a little reminder now and then.

That's the idea behind the e-newsletters we e-mail to readers on a regular, weekly basis.

The weekly e-newsletter highlights the latest stories and photos posted on our websites and serves as a reminder to all the other content you can find on Wicked Local, including obituaries, a comprehensive local, online calendar, and links to our Facebook and Twitter pages.

Of course we hope you're checking our websites every day, several times a day. But we realize people get busy during the course of the week and may need a friendly nudge now and then to remind you to check out the latest stories.

The e-newsletters are sent out to coincide with the publication day of your local community newspaper, although stories, photos and other local, useful information are posted to the websites on a regular, daily basis.

While the e-newsletter primarily serves to promote what you can find on the website, you will also see what might be exclusive to that week's newspaper, as well as how to subscribe to the newspaper online, and where you can pick up extra copies of the newspaper.

In addition to the weekly reminder to check out what's new on the website, the e-newsletter distribution list will be used to send out news alerts, whether it's a breaking news story, some weather-related update regarding school being closed, or some other timely information worth communicating.

It's free and easy to sign up to receive the e-newsletter.

Go to your Wicked Local website and find Hot Links at the top of the Web page. You'll see a link that reads, "Sign up for our e-newsletter."

You'll be asked to enter an e-mail address and your name. Once you click on "Subscribe to list", you'll be sent an e-mail verifying your interest in subscribing to the e-newsletter. That's it. It's pretty simple to register.

HEALTH NOTES

Thoughts on a range of issues

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

It's important to select an exercise program, which will carry you into your 70s and 80s.

Transitions — The changes within the last 10 years have been substantial. Many however have not been as substantial as they appear. One of the first that one observes is the prevalence of people with a cell phone nearby; generally in their pocket or hiding their lower jaw. Conversations between individuals, originally limited to land lines, can now be accomplished virtually anywhere except in dead zones. Considerably more and diverse interpersonal conversation will be available as adults enter retirement age.

New Fee Schedule — For things like inspecting septic systems; licensing establishments who are dealing in food and drink, etc. The schedule, traditionally lower than adjoining towns, required considerable adjustment. In making the transition, we tried to nudge people gently into more healthy habits; like raising the license fee slightly for establishments selling spirits, and minimizing fees for health clubs, etc. Stop by the BoH office for a look at the schedule to see if your organization is affected.

Sports — The most often cited original research article "Influence of exercise training on physiological and performance changes with weight loss in men," by Dr. W Kraemer demonstrated that augmenting dietary interventions for inducing weight loss with aerobic and resistance exercise programs provided clear health and fitness benefits, compared to weight loss by diet alone. In other words, exercise is medicine.

Increasingly youth sports programs have been created with divided objectives. A second sports goal in schools has been to have a program, which can produce a championship team. When school sports entertain the concept of developing an income producing team, sometimes, a broad based implementation of a holistic exercise program for the school population is interrupted. Students are sometimes left without recognition of the need for sufficient habitual exercise to promote the transition to a healthy middle age and beyond. Fortunately Cohasset sponsors sports programs at every level for it's citizens and if you feel you're not getting enough exercise, see the Recreation Dept. at town hall. It's important to select an exercise program, which will carry you into your 70s and 80s. Nowadays, the new de-facto retirement age is more likely 70 or 75 than the conventional 65.

As we age — A study in the Journal of the American Geriatrics Society conflicts with research that suggests that being overweight contributes to a long list of health problems, including heart disease. Leon Flicker of Australia has suggested that those people who survive to age 70 in reasonable health have a different set of risks and benefits associated with the amount of body fat to 'younger people'. Flicker and colleagues looked at a decade's worth of data regarding the health of more than 9,200 Australians aged 70 to 75. Australia is ranked as the third most obese country in the world after the United States and the United Kingdom. The study defined obesity as a chronic condition defined by an excess amount body fat based on body mass index, a measurement that takes weight and height into account. The four weight categories used in the study included underweight, normal weight, overweight and obese. Those who were overweight —a step below obese — faced a 13 percent lower risk of death compared with those who were normal weight. But no benefit was found for those who were obese. The study also found that being sedentary doubled the risk of death for women and raised it by one-quarter for men.

If you continue with a moderate level of exercise; watch what you eat and drink, generally lead a healthy life, maturity will last a lot longer than it used to.

Snow Day did not stop the news

LIFE AT CHS

NATALIE DIGNAM

It's all about the snow day! That's right seniors, a day off we don't have to make up! After a snow day Wednesday, and no school Friday for a professional day and Monday for Martin Luther Day, this week is more about the absence of school than anything else. With that in mind, what were we supposed to do on Thursday? A suggestion to the administration: maybe another day off?

Anyway, CHS is still busy this week: Art Mag is starting up again, so drop by Mrs. Berkowitz's room for our next meeting (which was suppose to be Wednesday and now is TBA). This Wednesday was also the Middle School Band concert, so good luck to the Middle School band and chorus with their performance! After all the hard work on the part of CHS students to keep the band program, it is great to see the Middle School band growing and once again proving how important music is to our schools and community. Also a reminder that Best Buddies meet in the upper lobby at 2:00 after school and new members are always welcome! By far the most exciting event at CHS this week was the Marine Science class' annual trip to the aquarium. While the rest of us dreamed of looking at fish, those lucky science students actually got to touch the touch tank! You're never too old for the aquarium, or the zoo, or visiting Paul Revere's house, so we should probably have more field trips to the J.F.K museum, even though most us have already been there.

In other news, the senior class had their first (stern) talk about graduation (gasp!) and, more importantly, semi. Although semi has traditionally been a junior-senior event, this year the majority of seniors agree that it was be more fun, and more financially fruitful, to open the dance to all classes. Some class segregated traditions at CHS, such as Powder Puff and the Semi-Formal, remain time-honored traditions while others, such as senior spirit week and pep rallies segregated by class, are seen as the source of class conflict and rivalry. In my opinion, it should be the students choice whether they want to honor traditions that segregate, and celebrate, the different classes at CHS, or whether we choose to create new traditions that favor equality over the individuality of each class. On that note, enjoy the long weekend!

Cohasset Sailing Club charts New Course

By Elizabeth Murry
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

After celebrating our golden anniversary in 2010, the Cohasset Sailing Club (CSC) is excited to announce that we are embarking on a major new initiative which will define our next 50 years. As most readers probably know, the CSC was founded to provide all Cohasset townspeople, particularly our children, with an affordable opportunity to learn and practice sailing. Generations of Cohasset residents, past and present, have honed a lifelong love of sailing and cherish many happy memories from their involvement with the CSC.

The last few years have been among the most vibrant in the club's history, with record membership and enrollment levels in the youth and adult sailing programs. While the CSC's organizational life is thriving, our physical facility does not match our current needs or aspirations for the future. The clubhouse, erected in 1979, suffers from a shortage of space for staff, classroom instruction, and storage. The roof is severely damaged, while the electrical wiring and plumbing fall below current standards (this is the short list). Given these realities, we have determined that replacing the building will be less expensive than the cost of conducting extensive renovations. By replacing the clubhouse, we also have the opportunity to "be green," which given both local and global environmental concerns is the responsible way to act in the 21st century.

For the past two years the CSC leadership has been developing a master plan for a new clubhouse and campus. Working with architects Hoadley Martinez and civil engineers Cavanaro Consulting, two local firms that have donated all of their design and consulting work, the new clubhouse will be the town's first public LEED (Leadership in Environmental Energy Design) registered building. While the new clubhouse's exterior is in keeping with traditional New England boathouse design, its flexible interior will feature a center hall that can be converted into various sized classrooms, an office, which can serve as additional meeting space, and a new sail loft. The Cohasset Planning, Zoning, and Conservation Boards have recently given their separate approvals to begin work on a new campus that will give the town's residents a much improved gateway to the ocean. The enhanced campus will fit in better with the Lightkeeper's House, another town treasure serving all residents, and will significantly enhance Cohasset's waterfront.

Now that the CSC has gained approval of its plan, to raise the necessary funds we are embarking on a capital campaign dubbed Destination: Home Port 42.14N 70.47W. The project's total cost is estimated at $500,000. All donations will be tax deductible, and gifts of cash and marketable securities are accepted. Pledges and donations may be sent to the Cohasset Sailing Club, P.O. Box 111, Cohasset, MA 02025. But we will hope to see you on March 12, when the CSC is hosting a fundraising party at Atlantica from 7:30 to 11:30 p.m.— please save the date. For further information, check out our new Facebook page, Cohasset Sailing Club, which is scheduled to go live today and will be constantly updated on all aspects of the Destination campaign.

2010 Real Estate Activity Report - Cohasset

Norfolk County Register of Deeds William P. O'Donnell reported today on real estate activity in Cohasset for 2010.

The same slight growth was seen with the average sale price of both commercial and residential property in Cohasset. Cohasset's average sale price in 2010 was $847,376.

Overall Cohasset's real estate activity improved in 2010. In total, 2727 documents were recorded during the year representing a modest increase from 2009. The same slight growth was seen with the average sale price of both commercial and residential property in Cohasset. Cohasset's average sale price in 2010 was $847,376. The number of land transfers in Cohasset for both consideration and nominal consideration increased by 14 percent from last year with 215 deeds recorded. Similarly, the total dollar amount of all sales in Cohasset increased positively by 21 percent with over $111 million in real estate sales. The number of foreclosures decreased slightly from the previous year and the amount of new mortgages recorded increased by 4 percent. In addition to the actual number of mortgages recorded, mortgage indebtedness grew to over $417 million in Cohasset, representing a 58 percent increase from 2008. This spike was due in part to historically low interest rates especially in the last quarter of 2010. Cohasset residents also took advantage of the Massachusetts Homestead law by recording 121 Declarations.

The Norfolk County Registry of Deeds, located at 649 High Street, Dedham, is the principal office for real property in Norfolk County. The Registry is the basic resource for homeowners, title examiners, mortgage lenders, municipalities and others with a need for secure, accurate, accessible land record information. The Registry land records back to the founding of Norfolk County in 1793 are available for online viewing. The Registry's online index is available from 1900 forward and continues to expand to include earlier records. The Registry of Deeds can be contacted via telephone at 781-461-6101, or on the internet at www.norfolkdeeds.org.

Noble arrived in Kenya in mid-May and has spent the bulk of her time getting to know the people, primarily the directors of the orphanages, getting to know the issues they face and identifying resources that could help.

Her role is to work to connect the orphanages together and to connect them to the resources they need.

"I see my role as having three levels," Noble said.

The first is community building between the orphanages.

"Giving them a collective voice and a chance for advocacy is important," Noble said. Currently, she is working with 16 orphanages and they have regular conferences and professional development days. The 16 orphanages that are part of the Flying Kites Oasis program are just a small fraction of orphanages existing in the Nairobi area alone. Estimates put the number at about 500, Noble said.

Second, the program reaches out to other organizations and professional groups in Kenya.

"We want to make connections on the orphanage's behalf, especially with education and health care," Noble said.

Third is to give the orphanages a presence on a more international scale. Through individual orphanage websites (currently under construction) the organization hopes to connect the African orphans with individual donors.

"We want the international community to know what a day is like for children at the orphanage," Noble said. Between the 16 orphanages there are about 1,200 children.

"I've been inspired and surprised by the incredibly simple idea that you can be an advocate for a collective group of these homes...there is incredible power in solidarity," Noble said.

With all the orphanages Flying Kites works with there are six requirements of participation. First, the orphanages must be registered with the government. Second, the directors must be willing and capable of regular communication with Flying Kites Oasis staff, donors, etc. Third, the orphanage must provide information for a website to be hosted by Flying Kites. Fourth, the leaders of each orphanage must provide their names and background. Fifth, be committed to fundraising and identifying needs of the orphanage. And lastly, the orphanage must be willing to provide yearly financials and be audited.

"It will be my personal project to help all programs get access to low-cost or free medical care."
— Frannie Noble

Noble said she has been met with support and "positivity" from the orphanages she is working with.

"Many of the directors want us to move faster," Noble said, adding it takes time to build relationships that will ultimately improve the lives of the orphans. "The directors want to do better. When I see a kid who should have gone to the doctor a little sooner or a child with shoes that are falling apart, I know they want to do better. They want to be an active participant of seeing change in their homes."

On a personal level, Noble said she wants to focus on bringing health resources to the children and ensuring they are sustainable.

"It will be my personal project to help all programs get access to low-cost or free medical care," Noble said.

Noble recalled seeing a little boy with third degree burns in a hospital. For a while she was outraged because she knew for a fact there was a Doctors Without Borders facility less than a quarter mile away from his home. The fact was, though, that the people taking care of him didn't know it was there.

Creating a list or a map, or both, of resources — and making those connections with those resources — is a priority for her.

On a broader scale, Noble said she believes that a family-based childcare with one adult taking care of several children in orphanages is the best for the child. She does not advocate for the opening of more orphanages.

"(The Flying Kites Oasis) program is not meant to get more kids into orphanages, but to get the kids already in the system an increased quality of life," Noble said.

Having fun with sheep's clothing

Entrepreneurs launch unique apparel company

By Linda Fechter
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Samples of Sheep in the Road apparel.

For months Elaine Hailer and Steve Rocha, both residents of Pembroke, have been working like dogs, sheep herding dogs, as they gathered all the resources needed to launch their new business "Sheep In The Road." Co-owned by Hailer and Rocha, "Sheep in the Road" is an apparel and merchandise company which produces T-shirts adorned with whimsical drawings and humorous sayings that play on words having to do with sheep. The entire concept is a seemingly uncommon one for this otherwise common farm animal and both Hailer and Rocha hope it will prove to be a successful one.

In 1999 Elaine Hailer (then Cummins) took a photo of a lone sheep on a remote road, while visiting her native Ireland. In the years that followed Hailer, a classically trained artist, began a series of oil paintings inspired by the photograph of the sheep in the road. The paintings were put on display at Cohasset's Bia Bistro, where Elaine works. The paint was barely dry on that first sheep painting before it had a SOLD tag hanging from it. A fan base quickly developed and her "little sheep" paintings went from being the talk of the restaurant to the talk of the town, and beyond

Over time, the animal has evolved into Hailer's own iconic version of big white puffy sheep with black faces, no noses and lots of personality. Hailer's paintings now sell for anywhere from $125 - $3,500. Her unique style and perspective of these animals has endeared her art to a huge contingency of buyers. The buzz led to a commissioned painting of a sheep on a surfboard for a wedding gift and that painting was the catalyst that launched Sheep In The Road.

"Elaine can look at something and draw it but she needs a reference," says husband, Mike Hailer, who works construction during the day but says he is truly a "cartoonist at heart." "I don't do well with references but I can draw things from my own imagination, so I did a quick sketch of a sheep on a surfboard for Elaine to use as a 'muse.'"

The collaboration worked and the "surfboard sheep" led to lots of laughs and discussions between the Hailers about developing an entire series of drawings of "the sheep" engaged in decidedly human activities. Mike Hailer drew several sketches of sheep fishing, skiing, lifting weights etc. However, neither Mike nor Elaine had a business background and the idea remained just that, an idea.

"If you have a sense of fun, then Sheep in the Road is for you. No matter who we show our designs to, they just can't help but smile."
— Elaine Hailer, co-owner

Steven Rocha, a coworker at Bia and an aspiring entrepreneur dreamt of owning his own business. He was inspired by what he calls the "universal enthusiasm" over Elaine's paintings. Rocha, armed with a degree in accounting and the capitol needed to jumpstart the business, approached Elaine. Rocha's drive and determination led the two into discussions which ultimately led to the formation of a company that would sell T-shirts, and eventually, other merchandise, featuring the personified sheep in the road.

"We're not trying to pull the wool over anyone's eyes," jokes Rocha. "Our philosophy is simple. We want to make a product that initiates a smile, while also giving them a high quality, high end product. And I believe we've achieved that goal."

"Sheep In The Road" is truly a family affair and a group effort. Steven's wife Kylyn, with experience in retail, fashion and marketing will work on product presentation. Mike draws dozens upon dozens of cartoons. He gets help fine tuning them from graphic designer Chris Loring of Whatever Advertising.

"If you have a sense of fun, then Sheep in the Road is for you," says Elaine. "No matter who we show our designs to, they just can't help but smile."

All are welcome to stop by Bia Bistro on Monday night, January 17th from 6-9 to meet Elaine and Steve and see what the baa-zzz is all about. Brian Houlihan, owner of Bia Bistro and the Tinker's Son, has been extremely supportive of the two entrepreneurs. Appetizers will be served. There will be a cash bar.

"I'm excited to see old friends and new ones this Monday at our launch," says Elaine. "I'm so grateful and a bit overwhelmed by the encouragement and support from people in all phases of my life, friends I haven't seen in a long time."

The evening will highlight 10 of the 60 designs that are currently being produced for "Sheep In The Road." Shirts sizes range from infants to adults. Costs are $25 for youth; $30 for adult. In the future the company hopes to partner with a local charity in order to give back to the South Shore community that has been so good to them.

For more information visit sheepintheroad.com. The site will go "live" on Monday night at the launch event. Merchandise will be available for purchase that evening. "Sheep In The Road" is based in Pembroke, Mass. All shirts for Sheep In The Road are printed locally at Cohasset's Goodwin Graphics on American made shirts.

"Sheep In The Road has gone from sit down talks about how we "ought to do this" to "we're doing it," says Mike Hailer. "The talk is over and we couldn't stop it even if we wanted to."

Follow "Sheep in the Road" to Bia Bistro on Monday night. Come see what all the baa-z is about!

BOYS BASKETBALL

Closing it out

By William Wassersug
WWASSERS@CNC.COM

It has been a while since the Cohasset boys basketball team beat Norwell, and with the exception of wins two seasons ago, Norwell has dominated the series in recent years.

With that in mind, the Cohasset boys went into Norwell with the confidence of a 7-0 team.

In fact, when Cohasset found out that Norwell big man Nick Volpe was out sick, they may have celebrated a bit too early, although in the end the Skippers came away with a 68-57 win, keyed by Robert Jones down the stretch.

"It changed the intensity of our players," Cohasset coach Bo Ruggiero said. "We didn't play a very sharp game. I credit Norwell. They shot well. They got to the line a little too often."

With that said, Ruggiero had praise for his team.

"With all the positives for them, we came out with our eighth victory of the season on an away court," he said. "In the fourth period we closed them out with our experience and defensive intensity. We finally got the ball inside to Robbie Mahoney (10 points) and he did some damage and got to the line. Robert Jones took over in the fourth quarter. I was very pleased with our poise down the stretch."

Without Volpe, Norwell looked to the deep ball to keep up with visiting Cohasset.

It almost worked, as Norwell hit big shot after big shot, including 25 points from Peter Marchetti, but down the stretch, the Skippers showed a little too much in the win at Norwell.

Robert Jones made 7-of-8 free throws in an 11 point fourth quarter and Cohasset broke open a close game in the last six minutes to keep their opening-season win streak alive with their eighth straight win.

Jones and Sam Richardson led Cohasset's attack with 17 points each.

Norwell looked to have things going early, jumping to a 7-4 lead after a Marchetti three, but Cohasset answered with a 10-0 run for a 14-7 lead with 2:19 left in the first quarter before Jordan Jenkins and Marchetti dropped consecutive treys to close within one.

Cohasset's Shane Haggerty (12 points) upped the Skipper lead to 16-13 with a jumper, but Norwell answered with a three to tie the game 16-16 before Kyrel Jaundoo closed the quarter with a jumper for an 18-16 first quarter lead.

Norwell kept firing away and tied it again 19-19 after Marchetti hit a pair of free throws with 6:58 left in the first half, and tied it again 23-23 when Brendan McGreenery went inside for two.

Cohasset started to take control late in the second quarter with a 9-3 run to close out the half, with Sam Richardson hitting inside at the buzzer to give Cohasset a 32-26 halftime lead.

Cohasset upped the lead to 37-31, and 41-39 when Marchetti struck again, knocking down all three shots from the line when he was fouled shooting a three.

Heading into the fourth quarter, Norwell was still very much in the game, trailing just 48-46.

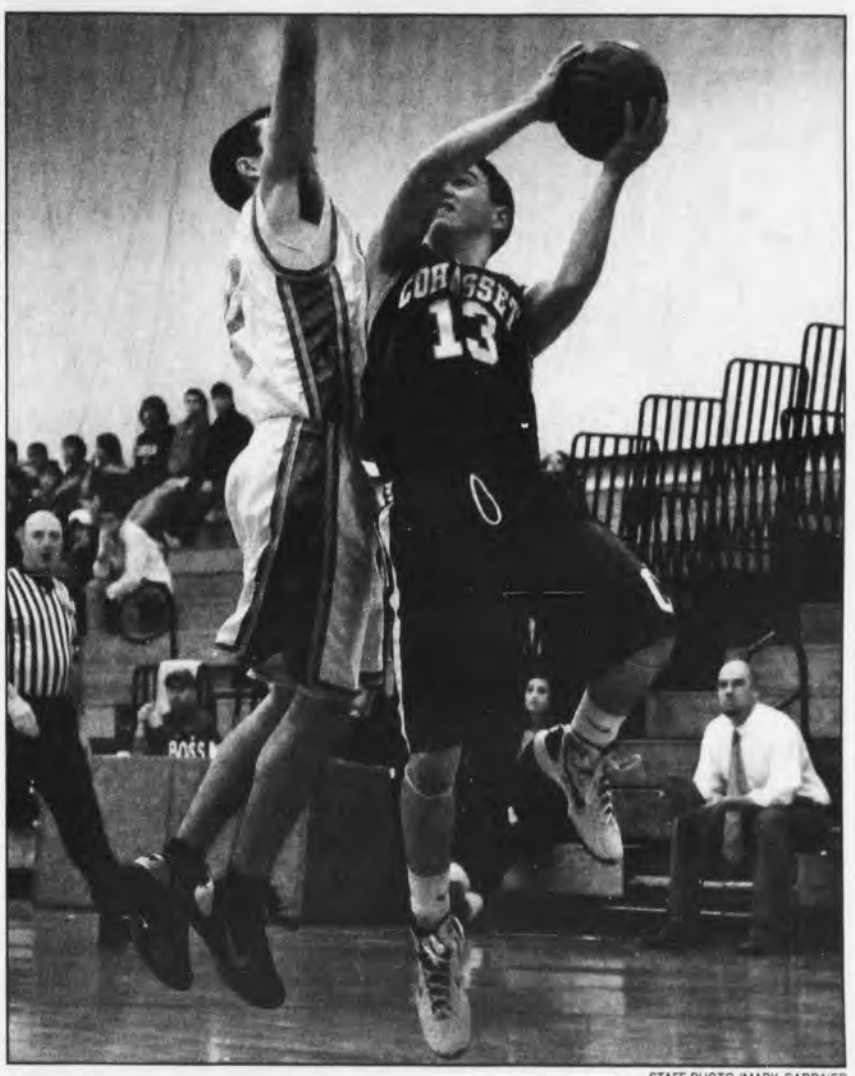
But that was all Norwell could muster as Cohasset took control down the stretch, keyed by a strong 12-of-16 from the free throw line in the fourth.

Cohasset only had a moment to celebrate the big victory.

They host Abington on Friday night.

Cohasset hasn't beaten the Green Wave in their last 25 tries.

"That's 12 years of double losses," Ruggiero said. "Some of the kids weren't even in school the last time we beat them."



The game is at 6:30 p.m.

Another reason for the extra confidence was Friday night's victory over Rockland.

Cohasset won that game at Rockland 51-49 with a big play in the closing seconds, handing Rockland its first loss of the season.

Richardson slipped out the back door, hauled in a three-quarter-court rainbow on an inbounds pass and sank a layup that dropped Rockland from the

ATHLETE OF THE MONTH

★★★ Robert Jones ★★★

" Robert is the (No. 1) man in our fast break system and gets the tempo of " Fast Ball " that we prefer to play. He not only had some big numbers scoring the ball but led the team in assists thru the month . A consummate team player, he is a pleasure to coach. I am excited for the boys and Robert success in this early part of the season and look forward to a year with them and with him leading the charge"

-Cohasset coach Bo Ruggiero

Year: Senior

Other sports: Football

Best game: It would be fitting to say all of them, because he's been so good all month, but by the numbers it would have to be the season opener against Hull where he scored 31 points on 79 percent shooting from the floor, with five assists. He was also 5-5 from the free throw line in that game.

STAFF PHOTO/MARK GARDNER

Robert scored in double figures in every game in December, despite sitting out the fourth quarter a couple of times when Cohasset had games well in hand and let the bench get some floor time.

In a win over South Shore Christian he had 10 points and 9 assists while playing just the first half. He also had 18 points and 5 assists in a win over Ashland. More importantly, in the fourth quarter of a close game, he controlled the game with his court savvy.

In Cohasset's five games in Dec., Robert averaged 19.8 points-per game.

GIRLS BASKETBALL

Downed at the wire

By Ryan Wood
RWOOD@CNC.COM

The Cohasset girls basketball team had a heck of a ride, but unfortunately for the Lady Skippers, that unbeaten journey ended Tuesday night. Visiting Norwell beat Cohasset, 45-43, snapping a 33-game winning streak.

The Lady Skippers last defeat came back on March 6, 2009, when they lost, 51-49, to Millis in the Division 4 South Sectional finals.

Since the 2007/08 season, Cohasset has a record of 78-5, two sectional titles, and one state title.

"I don't think the kids knew there was a streak, and neither did I," Cohasset Head Coach John LeVangie said. "If a streak is out there, every team in the last 33 games was trying to beat us. We had an off night shooting and still took it down to the wire. It was a great experience for us."

Carli Haggerty, who led all scorers with 25 points, hit two three pointers in the final nine seconds, including one at the final buzzer.

Cohasset jumped out to a 5-0 lead on a three-pointer from Anna Seraikas (10 points) and a jumper in the paint by Haggerty. Seraikas spotted up for a pair of three-pointers in the first, pacing Cohasset to a 10-8 lead after one quarter. Haggerty made one-of-two free

SPECIAL TO THE COHASSET MARINER

This past Saturday, young wrestlers from across the state arrived at Cohasset High School ready to compete for the title of Champion.

The gymnasium was packed full of people. Parents and teammates lined the stands, hollering encouragement, wincing sharply as someone is slammed into the mat. Coaches camped at the corners of the mats, directing their wrestlers in combat, gesturing and shouting instruction, and the young athletes gathered in small groups scattered about the gym.

The day was long and the wrestling was fierce, some bouts lasting seconds and some dragging on into overtime. Harry Helbock (Fr.) saw one early victory, and Derek Froio (Jr.) clamored his way through his matches to take third place in his weight-class before the finals.

Cohasset then had four wrestlers competing for first place: Captains Alex Kinnealey (Sr.), Gus Helbock (Jr.), Justin Yeager (Sr.) and our favorite Thomas Flibotte (Sr.).

Helbock worked his foe, a State-ranked athlete from Holliston, with great resolve and Four hockey games in five days is a hard thing to do if you're a player but it's also hard for the coach as well. "As a coach, you have to worry about the demands that kind of schedule puts on your players", coach Bob Walsh acknowledges. "If you think like a teenager, you believe you're invincible. You think you can play through anything and you don't think about the wear and tare the body takes playing the fastest, hardest game there is. As a coach, the biggest thing becomes managing your team resources so you can survive the week."

This week the Skippers started off on Wednesday afternoon by playing Hull in Randolph. "Fortunately, the bus ride's not too long from the school and the boys are ready for the first game of the week," explained Walsh.

Cohasset dispatched Hull 5-1, followed with a 4-1 win over South Shore Voc Tech, dropped a 5-3 game to league-leading Abington/East Bridgewater and

Hoop it up - South Shore Basketball Notebook

Week 4

Last week the MIAA met to discuss the possibility of making Division 4 statewide, and a discussion about a Super 8 for basketball was brought to the table. Can you imagine the top 8 teams in the state regardless of division playing a double elimination tournament. This formula has definitely worked in schoolboy hockey, and the movement to the hardwood would be an outstanding event. Picture the Newton North teams with Anthony Gurley (Umass) and Corey Lowe (BU) playing against the Jack O'Brien led Charlestown teams in a sold out Boston Garden. For the time being this event is just in the discussion stage, but by this time next year maybe it will become a reality.

As we move closer to the halfway point in the season, league titles and division winners are up for grabs. The crowds seem to be getting bigger and each possession is becoming that much more important. Lets take a look back at the week of South Shore basketball.

Outstanding Performances

A Sam Richardson lay-up with 6 seconds left gave Cohasset a 51-49 victory at Rockland.

Weymouth guard Jared Terrell led the Wildcats in scoring in wins over Dedham and Wellesley.

The Hingham boys rallied from an 18 point half time deficit to beat Whitman Hanson 58-56.

Megan Otto had 27 points in a Scituate win over Quincy.

Carli Haggerty had 19 points and 20 rebounds in Cohassets win over Rockland.

Marshfield girls had wins over Falmouth and Plymouth South - Erin Dougherty had 24 points and 10 rebounds. vs. Falmouth and Nicole Beresford had 23 and 10 vs. Plymouth South.

Zack Shaughnessy had 19 points and 13 rebounds in SS Christians win over Bristol Aggie.

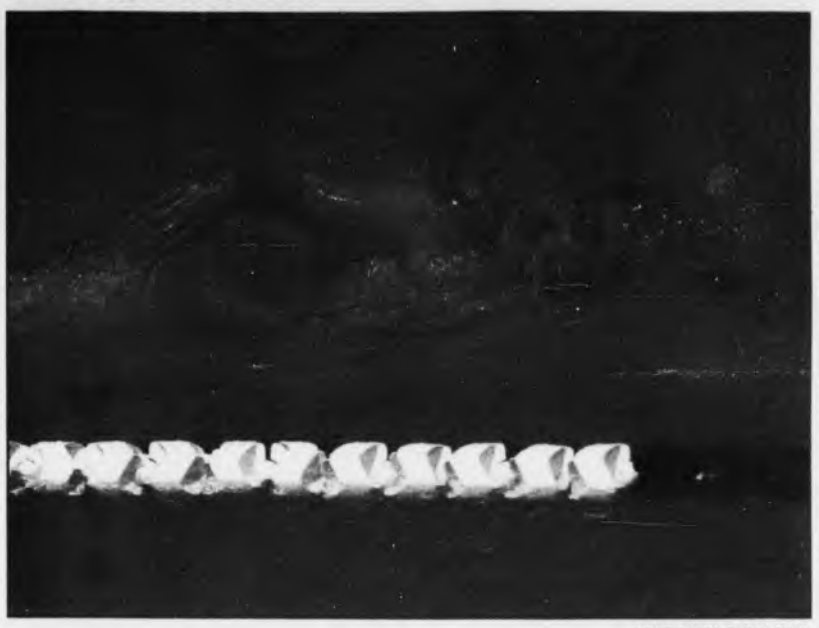
Next in the lineup was Yeager, who firmly thrashed his opponent, but succumbed in the third period to take second place at 160 lbs.

Flibotte wrestled a close match at 171, dominating his foe but just falling short of achieving a point advantage, and too took second place.

In what was possibly the match of the year, Kinnealey took on Nauset's Brendan Battles for the 215-lb title.

Kinnealey faced a gargantuan human being with a gargantuan ego, and they squared off for the entire six minutes, Alex refusing to get pinned by the brute. Eventually, Battles would wrestle Kinnealey down and let him up, almost toying with him, loving every minute of being the big man on campus. At this point Kinnealey had the entire gym rooting for him, and when he charged at Battles from behind, the crowd exploded with approval.



Unfortunately, Alex was unable to come out on top points-wise, and took second place.

The overall winner of the tournament was Holliston, with Tri-County being the runner up, and Cohasset placing sixth.

Afterwards, Coach Torin Sweeney spoke of the tournament: "It was a really competitive tournament, with the balance of Lynnfield, Tri-County, and Holliston, those three are really good teams, and with the balance of Hanover, Rockland, and Cohasset, it was just a fantastic tournament," he said. "The talent was really spread across the board, and the finals were great. Flibotte and Yeager will learn from the mistakes they made in the finals and probably won't repeat them moving forward into Sectionals and States, and what can you say about AK, I think he won the hearts and souls of everybody in the stands."

South Shore Voc Tech who had defeated some tough teams earlier in the season.

"We played well against SSVT, Walsh said. "They have some skilled players and were tough; physical competitors. There were a lot of penalties in that game but it was the first game we really played well for three full periods so we managed to come away with a 5- 2 win."

On Saturday, the Skippers faced off against undefeated league leaders, Abington/East Bridgewater and lost a tough 5-3 game.

"I knew these guys were going to be tough," Walsh said. "I had the opportunity to get to know some of their players over the summer in a summer hockey league. The kids I met are good guys and good players. The team is well coached with Brian Smith as the head coach."

A/EB took and early lead finishing the first period 2– 0, and never really gave it up.

"We scored 1 in the second but finished that period 3– 1," Walsh said. "In the third, they scored two more and we battled back to finish with the loss of 5– 3."

Walsh said fatigue was a factor.

"Despite the fact that we played our best in the third, we were just too tired plus they really peppered Jack, (senior goal tender Jack Nelson), with 30 shots as opposed to our 15 on them," Walsh said. "We also came away with some injuries, Eves, (junior forward and assistant captain, Alex Evans), got hit in the throat with a puck and (freshman forward), Tommy O'Brien racked his knee during one shift. All in all, after that beating, we were gassed and hopeful that we were going to have enough to play league powerhouse Norwell the very next night."

Norwell is always a big game.

"Sunday night, I walked into the rink at Hingham and it was like a playoff atmosphere," said the coach. "I was running into CHS alumni and kids who played their high school hockey for me during these past four seasons and the Norwell stands were packed. You'd have thought we were playing at the Garden for the state championship. I mean, the rivalry is like that of the old time Canadiens and Bruins, but this was great. The difference in this case is, the fact that Cohasset hasn't beaten Norwell in hockey since even before I was coaching here."

The game opened with Norwell scoring first, about halfway through the first period at 7:22 of the period, when Ryan Brown scored assisted by Roach and Kellie Duffy.

"That kind of put us back on our heels a bit," remarked Walsh. "We missed a defensive zone coverage and Ryan put it by Jack."

In true fashion, as it's been this year, the response came at 9:32 of the first when Anders Goetz combined with Alex Evens on a power play goal to tie it up. Then just about a minute later, at the end of their shift, Evans scored assisted by junior John Collins putting Cohasset in the lead 2-1 as the period ended.

"That line is just a line of horses," said coach Walsh. "They'd been running ragged since the A/EB game but I think this was more adrenaline with all the fans at the game".

In the second period, the Skippers took a two goal lead at 9:60 when, John Collins scored assisted, this time by sophomore Conner Goetz.

"J.C. played very well last night. He had a tough game against A/EB, to the point where I sat him a bit, to try and re-focus him. Like all good players, I don't think he liked it and he really brought it against Norwell," Walsh said. "The boys know that It's not personal but that I'll do what is right for the team. I owe that to my seniors."

Norwell came alive after Cohasset's third goal and responded at 12:20 when Kellie Duffy received a pass from Craig Frehill and dangled through the Skipper's defense to finish off with a goal. Then again at 13:49 of the second, The Clippers knotted the game at 3-3 before going into the locker room at the end of the period.

"I walked into the room and I could feel that despite how exhausted my guys were, there was a lot of mixed energy," said Walsh. "Some from the guys who wanted to be in the game, some from the guys who didn't want to lose this one. I asked the guys, "What's the score?" and every voice yelled, "Zero / zero", and I knew they were ready. At that point, we, (the coaches), told them the team that wins the period will win the game, so ignore the scoreboard and win the period! I left the room and it was all up to the captains at that point to get their boys fired up for the finish."

The Skippers made quick shift changes during the third period and the game and fans went crazy as both teams had multiple scoring opportunities. But between missed goals and big goalie saves, the third period was just a pure battle of will. Then, with 9:48 remaining in the game; (the teams were playing 4 on 4), John Collins scored assisted by Alex Evans and Anders Goetz putting Cohasset up 4-3.

Then Norwell had one last shot when Cohasset senior defenseman Sam Leahy was called for a cross check with less than a minute remaining in the game. Norwell pull their goalie and had a 6-on-4 power play with the faceoff in the Skippers end of the ice.

"Every player wants to be on the ice for this one, we had the right guys on for the situation," remarked Walsh. "The boys set up and played the kill very well when Anders intercepted a pass, controlled the puck, got just over our blue line and put one in the empty net to finish the game Cohasset 5, Norwell 3.

"There are few games that stand out for me but this one will definitely be one of those games. Norwell has always been a good and tough team to play. The competitions we've had in the past have been good games but we've always fallen just a bit short. We can enjoy this for a day or two but then it's back to work to prepare for Rockland on Saturday. They are another tough team and they also beat Norwell 5-3."

throws early in the second quarter to put Cohasset ahead, 11-9, before Norwell's Ryane Williams hit a runner from the left side to tie the game at 11 apiece. Norwell never trailed after taking a 12-11 lead on a Vierra free throw with 4:37 left in the second quarter.

The Lady Clippers took their largest lead of the game when Williams hit a runner with 6:10 left in the third quarter to make it a 23-15 game and keyed a 7-0 run. The Lady Skippers came back to cut their deficit to two, 26-24, at the end of the third, but a 7-0 Norwell run early in the fourth quarter made it a 33-25 game with 6:05 left in the game.

Cohasset got within four points on a pair of free throws from Haggerty with 2:38 remaining on the clock. And with nine seconds left, Haggerty buried a three that pulled Cohasset to within four at 44-40. Norwell's Brenna Diggins then made one of two free throws with 7.2 seconds left before Haggerty hit a three at the buzzer.

Allie DeBenedictis led Norwell with 13 points, Diggins scored 10, and Vierra added eight points, including five in the fourth quarter. Her three-pointer with 1:47 left in the fourth quarter sealed the win for the Lady Clippers, who improved to 10-0 overall and 6-0 in the South Shore League.

The Lady Clippers fended off a stifling full-court press by Cohasset in the fourth quarter and held off a late rally by the Lady Skippers (8-1 overall, 5-1 SSL).

LeVangie said the press didn't work as effectively as it could have, which allowed Norwell to take advantage.

Vierra keyed the victory for Norwell by hitting a three-pointer with 1:47 left in the game that put the game out of reach for Cohasset.

In their previous game, Carli Haggerty had 19 points and 20 rebounds to lead the Cohasset to a 60-41 win over Rockland on Friday night.

Lindsey Davis and Anna Seraikas each scored 11 points, and Rachel Fredey had 10 points and 12 assists.

SALOME'S STARS
FOR RELEASE WEEK
OF JAN. 24, 2011

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) Single Lambs looking for romance could find Cupid especially accommodating this week. Paired partners also find their relationships benefiting from the chubby cherub's attention.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) Keep your keen Bull's eye focused on your target, and shake off any attempt to turn your attention elsewhere. You should get some news later in the week that might answer some questions.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) Your early enthusiasm for a project might have been somewhat premature. Although you feel positive about it, you might need more information in order to make an informed decision.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) Taking on a new responsibility might seem like the politically correct thing to do. But even with the promise of support, was it the wisest? Consider reassessing your upcoming decision.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) Apply yourself to completing your task despite all the distractions that might be interfering with your work. Then reward yourself with a weekend of fun shared with people who are close to you.

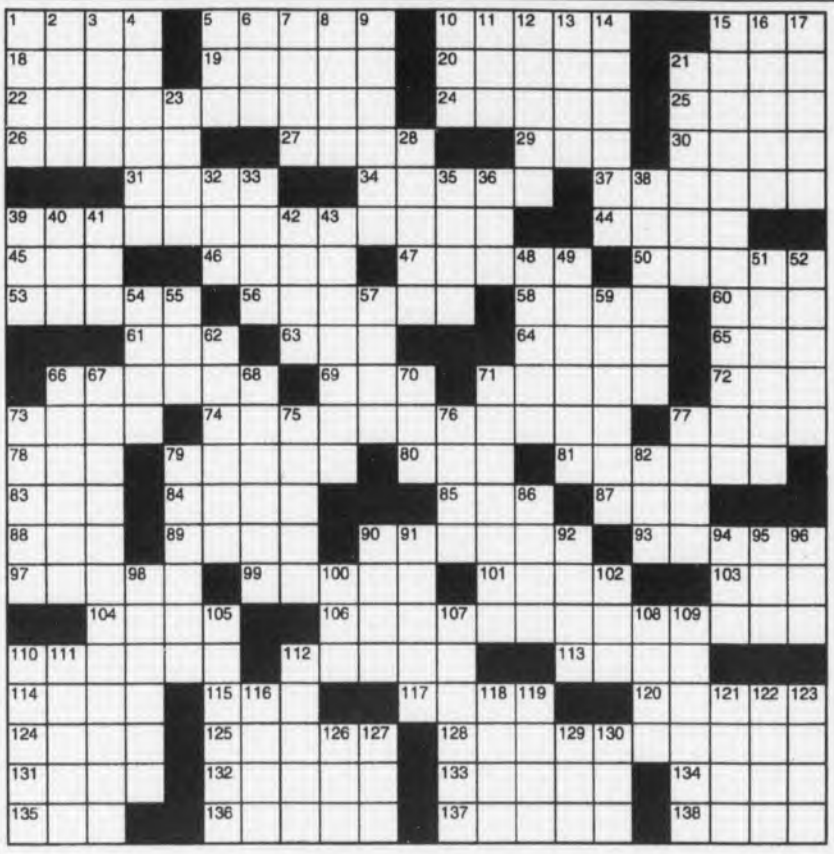
VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) A business agreement from the past might need to be looked at again. Use this unexpected development to check out other matters related to it. A weekend venture proves to be rewarding.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) Don't ignore that uneasy feeling about making a commitment. It could be a case of understandably cold feet, or a warning that something isn't as right as it should be.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) A colleague could be more supporting of one of your efforts. But it's up to you to make the case for it, and that could mean opening up a secret or two, which might be a problem for you.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) Expect some good news about a relative you've been worried about. But don't expect the full story to be told — at least not yet. A workplace matter might face shifting priorities.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) Despite some anxious moments, you could have good reason to be pleased with how things are turning out. An end-of-the-week call might hold some interesting information.



AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) A long-overdue expression of appreciation could be offered soon. But admit it: You never really expected it would happen, right? Meanwhile, keep your weekend options open.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) It's a good time to dive right into a new challenge, whether it's learning a computer program or how to drive a stick shift, or making a new friend. Whatever it is, good luck.

Fun By The Numbers

Like puzzles? Then you'll love sudoku. This mind-bending puzzle will have you hooked from the moment you square off, so sharpen your pencil and put your sudoku savvy to the test!

Here's How It Works:

Sudoku puzzles are formatted as a 9x9 grid, broken down into nine 3x3 boxes. To solve a sudoku, the numbers 1 through 9 must fill each row, column and box. Each number can appear only once in each row, column and box. You can figure out the order in which the numbers will appear by using the numeric clues already provided in the boxes. The more numbers you name, the easier it gets to solve the puzzle!

Rabbi Jonah Pesner featured speaker at Abbey

The Glastonbury Abbey's Lecture Series "Listening To Other Voices: Be Not Afraid: Do Justice, Act Kindly" will feature Congregation-Based Community Organizing: Creating Sacred Relationships, Building Power and Repairing the World with Rabbi Jonah Pesner at 7:15 p.m. Thursday, Jan. 20, at the Glastonbury Conference Center, 16 Hull St., Hingham.

Across the United States and overseas, religious congregations are joining hands across lines of race, class and faith to act powerfully and effectively for social and economic justice. First developed during the 1930s in Chicago, broad-based or Congregation-based community organizing is being used daily by churches, synagogues and mosques in successful campaigns for living wage ordinances, health care access, affordable housing construction education reform, and more. Rabbi Pesner, the founder and director of Just Congregations, the community organizing strategy of the Union for Reform Judaism, and a national teacher and leader, will present the core principals of this transformative process. He will show how it makes religious congregations relevant to its members' lives and allows members to bring deeply held values to bear in the public forum. Rabbi Pesner chaired the interfaith coalition that successfully secured health care for a half million-plus people in Massachusetts.

Lectures are free and seating is limited. First come first served. No reservations.

Marian C. Atkinson

SCITUATE – Marian Clare O'Leary Atkinson of Scituate, formerly of Cohasset and Dorchester, departed this world peacefully, on Jan. 7, 2011.

Thomas E. Atkinson Sr., her devoted husband of 51 years, was at her side. She was also surrounded by her loving children; Sarah McKeough and husband Paul; Peg Atkinson; Thomas Atkinson, Jr. and wife Janet; Nina Monty and husband Treg; John Atkinson and wife Heather; Maura Butler and husband Kevin; Karen Witkowski and husband Jamie; as well as her 15 grandchildren. She is survived by her brother Thomas O'Leary, her sister Ellen Winn, her adopted sister Mary Desmond; her cousin Eileen O'Meara and countless nieces, nephews, former students, and "adopted" children. She will be missed, but never forgotten, by all who knew and loved her.

A graduate of Boston College ('57), she taught special needs and 3rd Grade in the Cohasset Public School for 25 years. She retired in 1997. "Mrs. Atkinson" made a profound difference on generations of children, many whom remained in touch with her decades later. She was an accomplished artist who loved to sketch and paint. She was a talented pianist who also played a mean harmonica (at least on her children and grandchildren's birthdays). She was an inventor of games. She was an enforcer of rules. She was an exceptional cook and beloved baker of "Nahnee" bread. She was a selfless citizen and an American patriot. She was principled. She was selfless. She loved everyone and everything unconditionally. Her love affair with Tom was epic, their marriage exemplary. She was a Catholic woman of profound faith who lived her life as Jesus Christ taught. These gifts, her legacy, live on in the children and grandchildren to whom she dedicated her life. Marian died in communion with her Savior. She is without question in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ, reunited with her beloved mother and father Thomas and Marian O'Leary; her brothers Robert and Richard, and her cousin Ann O'Meara. She left the world a better place.

Visiting hours were from 3:00 to 8:00 p.m. on Monday, Jan. 10, at McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, 1 Summer St., (across from St. Anthony's Catholic Church.), Cohasset, MA. Funeral Mass at 10:00 a.m. Tuesday, Jan. 11, at St. Anthony's Catholic Church, Cohasset, MA.

In lieu of flowers the family requests donations be made in Marian's name to any of the following: the Semper Fi Fund (www.semperfifund.org), St. Jude's Children Hospital, Ave Maria University in Florida, or Hospice of the South Shore.

Get ready to have a Ball

Company Theatre presents 'An Evening with Lucille Ball'

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

"An Evening with Lucille Ball: Thank You for Asking!" starring co-writer, actress Suzanne LaRusch.

Lucille Ball's husband and co-star, Desi Arnaz, was the "I" in the couple's classic television series, "I Love Lucy," but the sitcom might well have been called "We Love Lucy," thanks to its tremendous, enduring popularity. The show, which debuted on CBS-TV 60 years ago, is still seen daily in reruns. Ball died in 1989, at age 77, but interest in all things Lucy remains strong, especially in this the centennial year of her birth. Few people know the Lucy phenomenon like Lucie Arnaz – Ball's daughter and the oldest of her two children with first husband, Arnaz – who is co-writer and director of "An Evening with Lucille Ball: Thank You for Asking!" starring co-writer, actress Suzanne LaRusch, which comes to Norwell's Company Theatre Jan. 28-30.

Arnaz, 59, co-starred with her mother and brother, Desi Arnaz, Jr., on "Here's Lucy," and has since had starring roles on Broadway in "They're Playing Our Song" and "Dirty Rotten Scoundrels." The mother of three children with second husband, actor Laurence Luckinbill, and stepmother to his two sons from a prior marriage, Arnaz was at home in Connecticut when she telephoned Town Commons for a conversation about everything from her legendary parents to what Ball might think of someone else playing her.

Town Commons: Where did the idea come from for "An Evening with Lucille Ball: Thank You for Asking!"?

Lucie Arnaz: My brother and I have control over anything involving our parents' images through Desilu, too, LLC, and several years ago we approved an actress by the name of Suzanne LaRusch to play a strolling Lucy Ricardo at the Universal Studios theme parks. Suzanne played Lucy Ricardo, my mother's "I Love Lucy" character, not Lucille Ball at Universal, but the experience led her to develop a show about my mother.

Lucie Arnaz co-writer and director of "An Evening with Lucille Ball: Thank You for Asking!"

TC: In the show, Suzanne recreates famous scenes from "I Love Lucy" including the Vitameatavegamin commercial. What was it like the first time you saw Suzanne playing your mother?

LA: It was a little eerie to see Suzanne as Lucille Ball. All I kept thinking was, here is someone who looks and acts like my mother – it was pretty kooky and pretty funny. It really made me laugh.

TC: How and when did you become directly involved in Suzanne's show?

LA: After getting our go-ahead to work on the show, Suzanne did some workshops eight or 10 years ago with another writer. Then she approached me again and said she wanted to do a show based on a series of master classes my mother had given at colleges and universities in the 1970s – after "Here's Lucy" ended and around the time she did "Mame." I went to an early run-through and gave Suzanne notes on the show which she fully implemented. Subsequently, however, she made several changes I had not mentioned and then I gave her another set of notes. After a while, Suzanne became discouraged and was going to step away because of various troubles including securing sufficient funding to move forward. My husband, Larry, and I did not want to see this happen so we decided to get involved as producers and help Suzanne restructure and rebuild the show. Two years ago, my good friend, Don Amendolia, was ready to take over as director when he landed a part in "33 Variations" with Jane Fonda on Broadway. I had never directed before, but Suzanne asked me if I would step in as director. I did and we got to work putting the show through previews at the Historic Boulder City Theatre, which my brother owns and operates in Boulder City, Nevada, just outside Las Vegas. It was almost two years ago, on my father's birthday, March 2, when we opened a show about my mother, directed by her daughter, at her son's theatre. My brother even ran the spotlight for the show, which is something he loves to do. For Desi and me, the whole experience was almost like the live theatre we did as kids in the back yard.

TC: Your parents divorced in 1960 after what was reportedly a sometimes turbulent 20-year marriage. Was it hard to write about that period in your parents' life?

LA: In this show, my mother lets the audience know that she was really hurt by some of what my father did and the impact it had on their marriage. At the same time, my mother was always a great defender of my father and his legacy. They may not have been together, but they truly loved each other until the end. I was there and I saw the love between them first-hand. When all was said and done, my mother would say, "I want my red and white carnations," which were the flowers my father always brought her.

TC: What do you want audiences to take away from this show?

LA: I just want the show to be accurate. I want people to feel like they're spending 90 minutes getting to know the real Lucy. For anyone who has ever wondered what it would be like to spend an evening with Lucille Ball, this show provides the answer.

TC: What do you suppose your mother would think of Suzanne's impersonation of her and the show overall?

LA: I know for a fact that she'd be floored and probably put Suzanne in her will. I really believe my mother would be thrilled with this show. We all kind of feel like her spirit is with us, because we know we would never have gotten this far if my mother didn't approve.

"An Evening with Lucille Ball: Thank You for Asking!" will be at The Company Theatre, 30 Accord Park Drive, Norwell, Jan. 28-30. For tickets and information, visit the box office, call 781-871-2787 or go online at companytheatre.com.

Message behind the music

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

In "Ruined"—the 2009 Pulitzer Prize-winning drama by Lynn Nottage currently being presented in Boston by the Huntington Theatre Company — a business-minded madam realizes that the only way to survive the civil war engulfing Congo is by not taking sides. With that in mind, Mama Nadi serves up both beer and women at her brothel to any man willing to check his gun at the door, cleverly brokering short-term détente between the opposing factions. Everyone from elected officials to rebel soldiers drink and dance while enjoying the favors of Mama Nadi's harem of "ruined" women turned to prostitution by earlier rape and torture. The atrocities may never be forgotten, but the women are still determinedly making their way to a better future through a blend of courage, humor, and hope.

Nottage wrote the play after a 2004 visit to East Africa, where she met with many Congolese women desperate to escape the armed conflict in the Democratic Republic of Congo (DRC). The many interviews she conducted provided the basis for "Ruined," which had an award-winning off-Broadway run. Its current incarnation is a joint production of the Huntington, La Jolla Playhouse, and Berkeley Repertory Theatre, and stars Tonye Patano (Showtime's "Weeds") as Mama Nodi, heading a cast of 13 in telling a story of war, which uses rape as a weapon to punish and destroy communities. The story, which earned Nottage not only the Pulitzer but also the Obie and Drama Desk awards for Best Play, is set to a backdrop of the music that is so much a part of African culture.

Hanson resident Alvin Terry, is one of two on-stage musicians featured in "Ruined."

Wendall B. Franklin (Jerome Kisembe), Carla Duren (Sophie), Zainab Jan (Josephine) and Tony Patano (Mama Nadi) in Lynne Nottage's "Ruined" playing at the Huntington Theatre through Feb. 6.

"Lynn Nottage has written a piece that is almost too real for the human ear. These women have been treated savagely in their lives. By the time they arrive at Mama Nodi's, things have started to improve for them at least somewhat," explained percussionist Alvin Terry, one of two on-stage musicians featured in the production. "Adesoji Odukogbe, who plays guitar, and I ease some of the pain in the story by giving rhythm to the indomitable spirit of these characters. There are so many atrocities visited upon these women and their stories as told in the play are all true, and toned down just enough to make them palatable."

Terry — a North Carolina native who lives in Hanson with his wife, Fern Cunningham — is a sculptor best known for public art including a statue of Harriet Tubman on Boston's Columbus Avenue.

He said he believes music is as essential to this heart-wrenching drama as it is to the real lives of the people the play depicts.

"Music is very much a part of the African tradition. Through music, these people show their sorrow. The musicians are present in Mama Nodi's house to keep things rolling and give the offenders a chance to leave the war outside the door. We are there to help everyone forget their troubles and, by doing so, to protect Mama Nodi's business. Our job is to see where the anger is and then play music that will pacify the situation. We are used in much the same way Africans have always used music, dance, and song. Our music can't stand in judgment of the rapists. We have to let the bad stories be told and then smother them out with music."

The Huntington Theatre Company will present "Ruined" at the Boston University Theatre, 264 Huntington Avenue, Boston, through Feb. 6. For tickets and information, stop by the box office, call 617-266-0800 or go online at huntingtontheatre.org.

Superintendent salary set

Schools to offer as much as $175K to right candidate

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

If a highly qualified and experienced candidate for school superintendent is found they could be paid as much as $175,000 in his or her first year.

The School Committee has a lengthy debate to reach that decision on Wednesday night, as it seems each member had his or her own number in mind — and it did not necessarily match the others' numbers.

In a recent meeting, the School Committee's search consultant Joanne Rys of NESDEC said a salary range should be communicated to the candidates. She suggested a $10,000 spread be given.

"If our goal is to have one of the top 10 school districts in the state then we have to pay a superintendent commensurate with other top 10 schools."
— Alfred Slanetz, vice chairman

However, most of the members of the School Committee said they would rather only give a maximum number to give them more space to negotiate in the case the favored candidate has less experience.

School Committee vice chair Alfred Slanetz felt Cohasset schools needed to be competitive with the other districts also looking for superintendents.

"If our goal is to have one of the top 10 school districts in the state then we have to pay a superintendent commensurate with other top 10 schools," Slanetz said. He wanted to see the school offer, at the high end, as much as $190,000. One of the competing districts for a school

Election season

Quigley to run; many still unsure

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

This year election season is beginning a little later than Cohasset is accustomed to. Because both Annual Town Meeting and the town election were moved back a month, so did the nomination process.

Beginning February 1, registered voters of the town can stop by the Town Clerk's office and take out nomination papers one of the 13 positions available.

In recent years, Cohasset has had fairly quiet elections with most of the open seats uncontested. Last year, the town election had a heated four-way race for two seats on School Committee. However, four election seasons have passed without a contested race for a seat on the Board of Selectmen.

In 2011, two three-year seats on the Board of Selectmen are available, while the School Committee and Planning Board each have one seat with an expiring term. The Sewer Commission has one seat expiring. The Water Commission has two seats with expiring terms: one three-year term and one one-year term position (to fill an unexpired term).

The Board of Health, Board of Assessors, Recreation Commission each have one seat expiring in April. Paul Pratt Memorial Library Trustees has three terms expiring. The Town Moderator and Town Clerk are up for election as well.

The Mariner checked in with several committee members up for re-election this spring to see who is planning to run. Yet, with a little more than a week until the election nomination papers gates open there was some uncertainty among potential incumbent candidates.

Fred Koed, who is currently serving his fourth term as a selectman, has not yet made a decision on whether to run. In a phone interview, he said he expects to decide in the next couple of weeks.

Karen Quigley, on the other hand, is sure of her bid for re-election.

"I'm not done yet. I haven't done everything I want to do," Quigley said. "I enjoy being a selectman, I'm good at it and I want to continue to be a part of the town."

Quigley named some of her unfinished business as supporting the new town manager and finance director in their transition. She's like to see through some government re-structuring, including changes to the water, sewer and DPW.

Bear Hill access question

Discussion will be March 1

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The Selectmen and neighbors were expecting to bring finality to the question of an access road off Reservoir Road to the Bear Hill water tank this week.

About mid-day on Tuesday Selectmen chair Karen Quigley notified the Mariner that that scheduled agenda item would be postponed. Apparently there was some miscommunication between the Selectmen and the Water Commission about the date of the discussion. As a result, the Water Commission did not post their meeting as required under the Open Meeting Law and therefore could not attend the Selectmen's meeting to present their case.

"This is such a contentious issue I'd like to have the full board in attendance."
— Selectmen Chairman Karen Quigley

Initially, Quigley moved the discussion to the February 15 agenda, but at the Selectmen's meeting on Tuesday night not all Selectmen were happy with that date. One member was going to be absent and other members wanted the discussion sooner.

"This is such a contentious issue I'd like to have the full board in attendance," Quigley said.

Selectman Fred Koed pushed for a discussion sooner rather than later as he felt the Water Commission needed to determine their access point.

"They've got to have access up there for heavy equipment," Koed said. "It's an issue of public health and public safety."

Koed said the less regular maintenance of the water tank that is done every decade or so requires heavy equipment and he'd like to see this resolved as soon as possible.

Quigley disagreed with Koed that it was a public health and safety issue.

After some back and forth and several proposed dates the board settled on placing the discussion on the Tuesday, March 1 agenda.

The Selectmen and the Water Commission have been talking about the

Some shellfish beds open

Officials need clarification on area

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The Town of Cohasset got a promising letter in the mail in early January, but the news might not be as good as initially expected.

The state Division of Marine Fisheries notified the town that much of its coast is now open to shellfishing. The news comes after nearly a decade of no shellfishing on the Cohasset coast.

Yet, the town's shellfish constable Paul Pattison said the area now open to shellfish doesn't have very many, if any, shellfish beds.

"I read the first paragraph of the letter and was quite excited. It sounds great, but I need clarification," Pattison said.

According to the letter only certain portions of the Cohasset coastline are now open to shellfishing. It delineates the water and flats from Strawberry Point in Scituate (near the glades) to roughly Black Rock Beach on the Cohasset/Hull line. However, the area does not include Little Harbor, the area near Cunningham Bridge, or Cohasset Harbor.

Pattison is seeking additional information to clarify where shellfish harvesting is now allowed and where it is still prohibited.

"Right now I don't think it covers any area that can be harvested or seeded, but I need a definite plan," Pattison said.

In the recent past, Pattison took steps to begin restoration of the once plentiful shellfish beds in Cohasset. He sought out and received a permit to seed clams, took an introductory class, but when it came time to purchase the seeds he was denied that permit. The state said the area he wanted to seed was too polluted to hold the shellfish life.

Shellfishing includes the harvesting of clams, mussels and quahogs.

Cohasset used to have flourishing marine life and a healthy population of shellfish. Pattison recalled many people harvesting clams in Little Harbor, Cohasset Harbor, especially in the flats up the creek near the Cohasset Maritime Center, and near Whitehead Beach, which faces the harbor.

"People used to gather at Little Harbor and dig for clams for their clam chowder. It was a social event. (I know if shellfishing ever does come back) it will never happen the way I remember it," Pattison said.

Pattison has watched the harbor change drastically over the past few decades and the loss of shellfishing is just one indication of the health of the harbor.

"I wish the town took more interest in the health of marine life," Pattison said.

New finance director hired

John Stanbrook starts January 31

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The Town of Cohasset has a new finance director.

Interim town manager Steve Lombard announced that the current town accountant in Mansfield, John Stanbrook, would start on January 31.

Stanbrook brings a wealth of accounting experience to the position. He has spent the last six years served as the town accountant in Mansfield, East Bridgewater, and Halifax. He holds an MBA in finance from Suffolk University and a Bachelor of Science in business administration from Northeastern University.

"We need someone with ability and background to come in here," said Lombard of his choice. Lombard interviewed the finance director candidates with Advisory Committee chair Sam Wakeman and interim town accountant Eric Kinsherf.

The Board of Selectmen welcomed Stanbrook aboard at their meeting Tuesday night. Cohasset has been without a full-time finance director since October. Long-time finance director Michael Buckley left his position to become the treasurer/collector in Hull.

"I don't think you are going to be bored here. I think you'll find the position both challenging and rewarding," said Selectmen chair Karen Quigley.

Stanbrook thanked the board for the opportunity; "I'm looking forward to getting down to business as soon as possible."

Lombard said he made clear to Stanbrook the need and desire for regular finance and budget updates for the Board of Selectmen. Quigley said the board aims to receive quarterly presentations on the town's financial status. Stanbrook is also familiar with some of the accounting software the town is thinking about purchasing.

"He'll be a great addition to the make-up of the financial team going forward and help to bring transparency to the financial department," Lombard said.

The current interim accountant Eric Kinsherf will be helping Stanbrook with the transition through mid-February, Lombard said.

"Thank you for the chance and let's get to it," Stanbrook said.

Lombard also introduced Stanbrook to the Advisory Committee on Tuesday night.

New Homestead Act signed into law

Norfolk County Register of Deeds William P. O'Donnell reports that Senate Bill 2406, An Act Relative To The Estate of Homestead, was signed into law by Governor Patrick on Dec. 16, 2010. The new law, which replaces the Commonwealth's existing Homestead Law, will take effect ninety days after it's signing or March 16, 2011.

"From the standpoint of real estate professionals and homeowners this is certainly welcome legislation in that it clarifies ambiguities present in existing Homestead Law while taking into consideration today's complex financial transactions and modern households." said O'Donnell.

The hallmark of the new law is that it affords an "automatic" Homestead or protection against creditors of up to $125,000 in a homeowner's equity in their primary residence. The scope of the new law extends to the proceeds from insurance as well as from the sale of a home and safeguards homeowners of two to four family and mobile homes. O'Donnell points out that the mechanism of Declaring Homestead is still available under the new law and recommended in that it protects a homeowner's equity up to $500,000. O'Donnell notes that his staff is available to answer questions regarding the new law and new Declaration of Homestead forms will be available in March.

The Registry of Deeds, located at 649 High Street, Dedham, is the principal office for real property in Norfolk County. The Registry of Deeds can be contacted via telephone at 781-461-6101 or on the internet at www.norfolkdeeds.org.

POLICE BEAT

Weather-related accidents pile up

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

• At 6:20 a.m. on Wednesday (Jan. 12) during last week's blizzard, a 66-year-old Cohasset man reported sliding off the road in his 2006 Dodge Caravan near Norman Todd Lane and Norman Todd Road. His van had to be towed out of the side of the road. There were no injuries, police said.

• At 11 a.m. on Wednesday (Jan. 12) during last week's snowstorm, a 2008 Mazda, operated by a 43-year-old Hull woman, ran into a 1993 Chevrolet pickup truck, operated by a 21-year-old Middleboro man, on King Street near the entrance to Dunkin' Donuts. Police said the pickup was making a right turn into Dunkin' Donuts when the weather-related accident occurred. Both vehicles were headed north. There were no injuries and neither vehicle had to be towed, police said.

• At 3:53 p.m. on Thursday (Jan. 13), two vehicles collided nearly head-on at the bad curve on Cedar Street near the golf course. Police said the road was narrowed due to the snow banks. A 2006 Toyota Highlander, operated by a 48-year-old Hingham woman, collided with a US Post Office Jeep, operated by a 48-year-old Hull woman. Both vehicles were towed. There were no reported injuries.

• At 10 a.m. on Friday (Jan. 14) a Cohasset woman reported that the rear-view mirror on her 2008 Toyota Highlander had been hit by a van. She and the 72-year-old Cohasset man, operating the South Shore Elder Services van, had squared away matters on their own by exchanging information and filling out accident reports.

Summons

At 7:02 p.m. on Monday (Jan. 10), an officer on radar patrol on S. Main Street stopped a 2000 Subaru Legacy for traveling 40 in a 25 mph zone, police said. Further investigation revealed the registration of the Subaru had expired and the operator's driver's license had also expired. The 41-year-old Scituate man was issued a criminal citation to appear in court on charges of unlicensed operation, operating an unregistered motor vehicle and speeding. His car was towed, police said.

Not a winner

Police said a 50-year-old Cohasset man, who thought he might have won Publisher's Clearinghouse, asked police last Wednesday (Jan. 12) to take a look at the mailing he received from the company. Police took a look at the notice and told him that unfortunately he was not a winner.

Warrant arrest

Police responded to a call from a concerned citizen about two men acting suspiciously in a 1996 Lincoln Continental parked in the parking lot at the Cohasset Harbor Inn. Police said the men were just talking but a computer check revealed the passenger, a 29-year-old Dedham man, had an outstanding default warrant for motor vehicle charges and he was placed under arrest.

Cars tagged

Police ticketed about seven cars that were parked in the no-parking, fire zone at the entrance at the circle at Cohasset High School last week. Police said illegal parking of that sort usually occurs during sporting events.

On the edge of election season

"The re-structuring of town government is a pet project of mine and if it's going to happen I want to be there," Quigley said. Fostering a strong, working relationship with the new school superintendent is a goal as well.

"The next three years will be a very exciting time for the town," Quigley said. "I think it's important and the town deserves to have a selectman who makes independent decisions based on fact, not friends or politics."

School Committee member Alfred Slanetz, who is currently in his sixth year on the committee, said he had not come to a decision on whether he would seek another term.

The Selectmen appointed Peter DeCaprio to the Water Commission in late August after long-time water commissioner John McNabb resigned in the spring. In order to retain his position, DeCaprio needs to seek election. DeCaprio said at this time he wasn't sure if he would seek election to the board, but did say he did not intend to commit to a three-year term. Both one-year and three-year terms water commission position are available.

Four-term water commissioner Glenn Pratt could not be reached by press time.

Planning Board member Clark Brewer ran for election in 2008 for a three-year position to fill an unexpired term. When reached this week he said he has been thinking a lot about seeking re-election, but has yet to come to a decision.

Sewer commissioner Wayne Sawchuk, who is finishing up his first term, intends to seek re-election.

Town Clerk Marion Douglas said she was still thinking about a bid for re-election.

Citizens interested in seeking an elected position can begin pulling nomination papers on Tuesday, February 1 at the Town Clerk's office. The last day to take out nomination papers will be Thursday, March 17.

Positions available for the May 7 Annual Town Election

Nomination papers for the Annual Town Election for 2011 will be available on Tuesday, Feb. 1, at the Town Clerk's Office. The last day to take out nomination papers will be Thursday, March 17. In order to hold an elected office, you must be a registered voter of the town. Please note that you are not running for office until you take out papers and the Board of Registrars certifies your signatures.

superintendent is Marblehead and they were offering as much as $185,000 annual salary.

"If we want to get the cream of the crop we need to go slightly above Marblehead," Slanetz said.

Slanetz got support for his motion to offer up to $190,000 commensurate with experience from member Paul Schubert.

"We want to spend the money to get a talented, qualified candidate who does a great job and is willing to stay in Cohasset. Five to ten thousand dollars is short money in a long game," Schubert said, adding it could cost the district more money if the schools have to buy out a contract of a superintendent who is not performing.

Slanetz's motion for a high end of $190,000 did not get majority support.

In that motion's wake, member Jeanne Astino proposed a salary commensurate with experience not to exceed $175,000 not including negotiated benefits. Her motion did not receive a second.

Member Linda Snowdale felt a range would limit the School Committee's option when it came to negotiation with a candidate.

"People looking at this position already know the salary in the region. I think we should just say salary will be commensurate with experience and in line with the other superintendent salaries in the region," Snowdale said. The other members of School Committee felt they should follow the advice of the search consultants and offer some guidance to be communicated to applicants.

Schubert proposed a salary not to exceed $180,000 commensurate with education experience. His motion was ultimately defeated.

Astino felt Superintendent Denise Walsh's salary was warranted because of her 15 years of experience working as a superintendent.

"For someone with less experience I don't think $180,000 is reasonable," Astino said.

Business manager Dave DeGennaro gave the School Committee some perspective as they debated on the high range of salary.

"I think you are missing the point. You want a candidate who wants to work in Cohasset. You want someone who wants to be here and wants to stay here," DeGennaro said.

Snowdale agreed, "we have so much to offer a candidate besides money."

School Committee chair Helene Lieb said there have been cases in other districts with superintendents who have stayed for a year then moved on or retired.

At last, Schubert proposed the motion that won majority approval. The maximum salary could be $175,000 commensurate with experience. The motion passed 4 to 1 with Snowdale voting against.

Although Slanetz voted in favor of the motion he said the maximum salary may make the district less competitive against the other districts looking for superintendents.

"We may not get our first choice candidate," Slanetz said.

The screening committee was presented with 22 applications for the superintendent position. They have narrowed those applications to 10, which they began interviewing this week and will continue conducting interviews into next week. The screening committee expects to have a recommendation of three to five finalists to the School Committee by February 1.

Insurance advisory committee ready to launch

The Board of Selectmen accepted the written charge of the recently formed insurance advisory committee. The committee, which will be composed of at least seven union members and two retirees, will begin meeting regularly in February.

The members of the insurance advisory committee have not yet been named. The members of the insurance advisory committee have not yet been named.

Help find the next town manager

The Board of Selectmen is looking for residents willing to serve on the screening committee during the search for the next Town Manager. They are looking to put together a group that represents a cross section of interests within the town.

The screening committee will narrow the candidate field, conduct preliminary interviews and recommend a group of finalists to the Board of Selectmen.

If interested in serving on this committee, send a letter of interest to the Town Manager's Office describing your interest and specific skill set. Letters should be sent to Board of Selectmen, 41 Highland Ave., Cohasset or send an e-mail to interim town manager Steve Lombard at slombard@townofcohasset.org.

Public records process gets check up

Complaint spurs School Committee agenda topic

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The School Committee did not get into the specifics of Altholtz's complaint at the meeting; instead spoke to how to handle the public records requests going forward.

As a public entity the school department and the School Committee are required to conduct their business above board. That means adhering to the Open Meeting Law and public records law.

In recent months, the School Committee has received an increasing number of public records requests. Sometimes it's for e-mails between School Committee members or other school personnel, other times it's for records pertaining to school business. Most of the records that pass through the school department, with some exceptions, are public documents.

Recently, the School Committee said, it received a complaint from a member of the community about the process behind a public records request. Howie Altholtz of Woodland Drive said a document that was part of his public records request was withheld when it did not need to be. Altholtz was not at Wednesday's meeting.

The School Committee did not get into the specifics of Altholtz's complaint at the meeting; instead spoke to how to handle the public records requests going forward. Superintendent Denise Walsh is the keeper of the records and is the primary contact for all public records requests. She was not in attendance at Wednesday's meeting.

"The bottom line is the chair (of the School Committee) should be in the loop for all future public records requests," said School Committee chair Helene Lieb.

From the audience, Adrienne MacCarthy said the School Committee should keep in mind being the "keeper of the records" is a part of the superintendent's job description.

"The public records law is not superseded by School Committee policy," MacCarthy said. "It's important for the new superintendent especially to know they won't be micromanaged and (the School Committee) has faith in (him or her)."

Lieb said it is important for the School Committee chair and the superintendent to have a good relationship and to communicate on these types of issues.

"I want to be clear no one was trying to withhold records," said vice chair Alfred Slanetz. In the specific case in question he said confidential information was a part of the record.

Member Jeanne Astino said the whole issue could have been a moot point if the superintendent had redacted the confidential information from the records.

"It would have eliminated all of this," Astino said. In the future, she suggested, any questionable document should be run by the School Committee chair for guidance.

Lieb reiterated the need for both parties – the superintendent and the School Committee – to be mutually respectful of each other's position and work together to resolve issues.

When reached on Thursday morning, Altholtz said the public records request underpins the whole public participation process.

"We pay public employees a lot of money and we have a right to expect them not to abuse the process," Altholtz said. "The public's right to know drives the public's ability to understand, which in turn drives effective participation. We have a right to expect (the public records process) to be administered openly and fairly. In my most recent case this clearly wasn't done."

Bear Hill water tank and its access for more than a year. The Water Commission is seeking to use a swath of town-owned land to create an access road for the water tank off Reservoir Road. The water department currently uses a long-standing easement off Pleasant Street to access the water tank. Last year the easement was reduced in size and moved to another part of the property.

Complicating the matter is the Water Commission has a signed contract with a cell phone provider to install cell antenna on the water tank and associated equipment on the surrounding property.

The cell phone company has said it could be difficult for their large trucks to negotiate the Pleasant Street easement.

Neighbors have repeatedly raised safety concerns over the proposed Reservoir Road access road. The proposed road, which would be gated, is located at a curve in the road on a hill. Many children and other residents use the area to get to school and for walking.

The Water Commission has held two public forums on the Bear Hill proposed access road since the last time they appeared before the Board of Selectmen.

Antenna for emergency dispatch

At the Tuesday night Selectmen's meeting, Fire Chief Robert Silvia spoke about the backup transmitter and receiver to enhance radio communications for the under development regional emergency communication center. A small antenna two feet in diameter will be installed at the lip of the water tank as well as a small associated cabinet.

The new antennas are being paid for out of the state 9-1-1 grant associated with the new regional call center. Hull and Norwell are getting radio communications upgrades as well.

"This upgrade will address issues we've had with our communications system since 2003," Silvia said. There are several blind spots in town where communication is difficult, if not impossible, that are being addressed in the upgrade.

"This is a public safety issue. It will have a huge benefit to every person in Cohasset, as well as our employees," Silvia said.

No heavy equipment is required to install the antenna, only a small pick-up truck. He said the installation could begin in early March.

Silvia said the regional emergency communications center, which will be based in Hingham, is on track to open in July.

Search consultant interviews for Town Manager slated

The Board of Selectmen will interview the three firms on Tuesday, February 1 beginning at 7p.m. Each group will get roughly 30 minutes to present their proposal and process.

With the new year well underway the Board of Selectmen are keen to get moving on the search for a new Town Manager. One of the first steps is to hire a consulting firm to help with the hiring process. Interim town manager Steve Lombard sought out three proposals from local firms who do this kind of work.

The Board of Selectmen will interview the three firms on Tuesday, February 1 beginning at 7p.m. Each group will get roughly 30 minutes to present their proposal and process.

On Tuesday night, the Selectmen also briefly talked about the composition of a screening committee. The screening committee will review the applications, conduct preliminary interviews and recommend a group of finalists to the selectmen.

The targeted number for the committee is seven or nine members (odd numbers are best to avoid a tie vote).

Selectmen chair Karen Quigley suggested three members of the public with a background in human resources or executive searches, one member of the Advisory Committee or similar town board, one person to represent the schools and two citizens at large.

Selectman Paul Carlson suggested at least one selectmen be on the screening committee.

Selectmen vice chair Ted Carr thought perhaps different advocacy groups in town, for example, seniors, be represented. Carr also suggested a town department head be a part of the screening committee.

Fred Koed, selectmen, suggested they wait to finalize the screening committee composition until a consultant is on board.

Also on Tuesday night, the Advisory Committee voted to transfer $7,500 of its reserve fund into the town manager's account to pay for the search consultant.

Cohasset teen crafts play to benefit Joslin Diabetes Center

Amaras Art Alliance to sponsor benefit performance

COURTESY PHOTO

Alexander Carroll, 16, wrote "Heaven's Music" after he was diagnosed with Type I Diabetes.

Sixteen-year-old Alexander Carroll, son of Paul Carroll and Diane Nahabedian of Cohasset, has written "Heaven's Music" a play with popular music to be performed at 3 p.m. Feb. 20, in the hall at St. Stephen's Armenian Apostolic Church in Watertown. Proceeds from the performance will benefit the High Hopes Fund at Joslin Diabetes Center.

"Heaven's Music" focuses on a guardian angel, played by Carroll, who oversees the musical education of a 6-year-old boy. The guardian angel's aim is to introduce the young boy to the beauty of all forms of music. The consequences of the journey are fun and somewhat silly as the guardian angel introduces the child to two teenage opera singers who try to out sing each other, a beautiful flutist, a solemn violinist, a pop singer and a dancer. All the performers are between the ages of 6 and 16.

Carroll crafted the play and began organizing this performance after he himself was diagnosed with Type I Diabetes. "I want to be part of a world that lives without Diabetes," says Carroll. "I hope that through my efforts as a singer and actor I can bring attention to the need for more research for Diabetes. I am so pleased that along with the other performers we can help Joslin Diabetes Center continue the amazing work they do."

The High Hopes Fund makes it possible for Joslin to ensure the essential parts of their mission remain adequately funded while providing much-needed hope for a world without diabetes and its complications to their patients and families.

"I hope that through my efforts as a singer and actor I can bring attention to the need for more research for Diabetes."

— Alexander Carroll

Taylor Frederick shares a hug with a young Haitian boy. Taylor, her sister Danielle, and Frannie Noble are guests at a special forum on their Global Mission Projects on Sunday at Second Congregational Church.

Sharing a passion for helping others

By the Rev. Gary Ritts
SECOND CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH

On Sunday, Jan. 23, the youth of 2nd Congregational Church are sponsoring a forum for Danielle and Taylor Frederick and Frannie Noble to share their passion for Global Mission Projects. A spaghetti supper will also be served.

Inspired by a segment on 60 Minutes, which aired in May of 2010, local teenagers Danielle and Taylor Frederick were moved to action. The subject was the earthquake in Haiti and the Global Orphan Project (GO). GO is a non-profit organization that transforms the lives of orphans all around the world with a large focus in Haiti. Mom (Michelle Cayer) decided she wanted to go and the two sisters jumped on board as well. Through various projects they were able to raise enough money to travel and bring along two checked suitcases each filled with 50 pounds of supplies for the children. Taylor writes: "Once we were there we played with the children, gave them a lot of needed affection and brought them clothing and supplies we had donated from friends in Cohasset."

Global Orphan Project is a non-profit organization that transforms the lives of orphans all around the world with a large focus in Haiti.

They will be returning to Haiti in March to continue their work.

Also presenting will be Frannie Noble who works for Flying Kites Global, a humanitarian organization that believes in extraordinary care for orphaned and abandoned children. Based in Nairobi, Kenya she helps run an orphanage outreach program called Oasis. She writes: "After two ASP trips during High School I knew I wanted to travel more. In 2009 I spent four months in East Africa working with these innovative orphan care centers."

Join us this Sunday for some amazing and inspiring stories of outreach and caring.

Eighth grader represents town

Participates in statewide community service project

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

This past weekend Cohasset Middle School eighth grader Brenden Morrissey represented the town of Cohasset at a statewide event. He joined 350 Massachusetts kids — one from every town in the state — at community service day in Boston.

The event, dubbed Project 351, was part of Governor Deval Patrick's inauguration events. A press release described the day as a demonstration of the state's commitment to the next generation of learners and leaders.

All eighth graders across the state were asked to write an essay about volunteer and what they have done to give back to their communities. Brenden Morrissey's essay was selected by middle school Assistant Principal Kerri Sandler.

"While we celebrate all students who donate their time and energies to the service of others, Brenden's essay was chosen because his narrative portrayed a young man who has a strong service ethic and who gives of himself in order to make a difference in the lives of others," Sandler said this week.

In recent years, 13-year-old Brenden has volunteered in several capacities in town. He has volunteered every year for the Cohasset Triathlon because of its association with the Juvenile Diabetes Research Foundation. The cause is close to his heart because he has juvenile diabetes, along with 220 million people worldwide. He also has volunteered at the Cohasset Youth Baseball and Softball Association's snack shack. With his local church he helped run a Halloween party for the youngest members and visited elderly in the community with cards and goodies. He also participated in a blood drive to benefit Crohn's disease research.

"I just think it feels good to give back," Brenden said. He has found that you typically get more out of volunteering than you give.

"There is so much I have, and donating and volunteering I can help less fortunate people. I love volunteering and helping people, especially in my community," Brenden wrote in his essay.

On the day of the Project 351 students from the region gathered at the South Shore Plaza to take a bus into the city. First they met at Cradles to Crayons in Brighton for a youth town meeting. Then, the group split up and headed to different locations where they participated in service project.

Brenden's group spent about three hours painting inspirational murals at Blackstone Elementary School in Boston. The school is one of the most challenged in the state and is among the lowest scoring schools on the MCAS exam.

At the school the group also painted picture frames so the students can properly display their artwork.

The murals were meant to be inspirational. Brenden said he worked on a themed mural about "abuntu," an African philosophy about how everyone is part of a community.

"It means somebody is not who they are without other people around them," Brenden said. During the community service Brenden got to talk and work with other kids from around the state.

"Working together with the other kids on the mural and picture frames was my favorite part," Brenden said.

After working at the school the students headed back to Cradles to Crayons for a dinner and wrap-up event.

During the day Brenden got the chance to meet Governor Patrick in person. Brenden said the governor told him to "keep up the good work."

Brenden gave his e-mail to one of the chaperones and hopes to get together with the other Project 351 students in the area to work on more community service projects.

Brenden Morrissey and Gov. Deval Patrick at the Project 351 event that was part of the governor's inauguration activities.

In a press release, Governor Patrick explained his purpose behind Project 351.

"Project 351 is about encouraging the next generation of leaders like Brenden to give back to our communities," he stated. "The goal is to generate 351 ripples of impact as the young people return to their homes and schools, spreading the spirit of service in Cohasset and across the Commonwealth."

Inspired by his participation, Brenden hopes to do more volunteering in Cohasset in the coming months and years. He'll be back at the triathlon and aims to help out at the Cohasset Food Pantry. He also hopes to get some of his friends to give of their time as well.

"Volunteering is fun with other people; it makes it go by much quicker," Brenden said. "(Giving back) is important) because the government can't do it all. People need to help in their community and help their neighbors."

EVENT PREVIEW

Motion through the ocean

CMI boat builder to give talk at Art Center

What: In harmony with the South Shore Art Center's current exhibit, "Motion," master craftsman Richard Wilmore, a professional boat builder and instructor with over 30 years of experience, will talk about small craft design and their motion through the ocean.

Who: The event is a partnership between the South Shore Art Center and Cohasset Maritime Institute. All are invited.

When: Sunday, Jan. 23 at 2p.m.

Where: South Shore Art Center, Bancroft Gallery.

Cost: The event is free. Raffle tickets will be sold at the event for a special prize – a hand-crafted 16-foot Swampscott Dory built under Wilmore's instruction. Tickets can still be purchased for $50 or five tickets are available for only $200.00. The money benefits the Cohasset Maritime Institute and its programs. Light Refreshments will be served.

What will you learn: Richard Wilmore will address lofting and building principles associated with various small craft and how these principles affect the performance of the vessel in coastal waters. The talk will address the interplay of form and function and convey an understanding of how the lofted lines of a boat determine the boat's motion on the water. You will also see a collection of beautiful artwork all representing the theme of "motion."

In this photo taken in November 2009, boat builder and Cohasset native, Richard Wilmore, and his dog Zip, stand inside an old wooden boat slated to be restored by Cohasset High School students the following summer. Wilmore will talk about small craft design and their motion through the ocean Sunday at the South Shore Art Center.

On the partnership between the Art Center and CMI: According to Jack Buckley, one of the founders of Cohasset Maritime Institute, the partnership between the Art Center and the Cohasset Maritime Institute dates back to the beginning of CSCR (Cohasset Student Coastal Research). The Art Center rents studio space on the second floor of CSCR. Over the years the two groups have talked about doing different things together.

"This one just seemed like a natural fit and the timing was right," Buckley said. "The motion theme of the exhibit is a great match for our organization."

Why should you come: "There are a number of reasons. First, the hand-crafted Swampscott dory will be on display at the Art Center. It will be very visually appealing to see this beautiful boat, which is a work of art itself, sitting in the main gallery. Second, Richard Wilmore is a really fascinating professional with tremendous expertise to share. Third, it's a great opportunity for those who don't frequent the Art Center to see what they have to offer," Buckley said, before offering one last reason. "And fourth, there's no reason to get excited about a Patriots AFC game, so come one down and party with us!"

For more information: Contact Jack Buckley by sending an e-mail to jcbuckleyjr@gmail.com.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Honoring his legacy

"I have been to the mountaintop..."

Martin Luther King Jr. delivered his legendary speech about his vision of the Promised Land as the clock ticked toward his assassination.

From his spiritual vantage point, the Rev. King clearly saw the day when people of different races and creeds would be united in equality.

On April 3, 1968, on the day before his death on a balcony of the Lorraine Motel in Memphis Tenn., King gave this promise:

"We, as a people, will get to the Promised Land."

During his lifetime, King strove for changes in the law that became landmarks along the way, notably the 1964 Civil Rights Act outlawing discrimination and the Voting Rights Act passed on Aug. 4, 1965.

The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., a Baptist minister born in Atlanta on Jan. 15, 1929, became an icon in the struggle for civil rights for African Americans.

On Dec. 10, 1964, he won the Nobel Peace Prize.

King inspired countless followers and achieved hard-won victories through his belief in non-violent protest.

King saw jail time as a result of this philosophy. In October 1960, he was imprisoned for taking part in a sit-in in Atlanta. Three years later, on April 16, during a civil rights protest, he sat behind bars in Birmingham, where he wrote the famous "Letter from Birmingham Jail" on civil disobedience.

When King and his followers endured violence without striking back, some thought that King was passive.

Yet while his actions appeared physically passive, his actions were spiritually aggressive.

King drew criticism by some civil rights activists because the people he envisioned marching toward the Promised Land were not only African Americans, but people of all races and creeds who longed justice and equality.

On Aug. 28, 1963, during the March on Washington for Jobs and Freedom, King delivered his "I have a dream" speech.

On Monday, Cohasset commemorated Martin Luther King Jr. Day with the annual breakfast sponsored by Cohasset clergy and the Cohasset Diversity Committee. On Tuesday, Deer Hill School held an assembly about Dr. King's work as a civil rights leader.

In his honor, we applaud those who carry on King's work without expecting praise.

All over town, there are unsung heroes and heroines who continue King's legacy by living his principles.

There is no way to number our neighbors who quietly fight poverty, promote peace in the community, and refuse to accept even the smallest injustice as "the way things are."

When someone donates to the food pantry, plucks a star from a Christmas tree to buy a present for a needy child, or donates gently worn clothing to nonprofit organizations, they are fighting poverty.

When someone mediates a neighborhood dispute, joins a prayer vigil, or gives a gentle response to the angry words of another, they are advancing peace.

The Cohasset Mariner is building a Readers Advisory Network of e-mail addresses so we can more frequently involve our readers in the content of the newspaper.

Readers, who join the network, may be asked for reactions to stories, ideas for stories or follow-ups, for a digital "person on the street" interview, or for a community commentary.

If you are interested in becoming a member of the network, email Mary Ford at mford@cnc.com. She will answer any questions that you may have. The Mariner promises to remove you immediately from the Readers Advisory Network if you request that we do.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Grateful for support

TO THE EDITOR:

We would like to extend a heartfelt thank you to the students/families of the Joseph Osgood and Deer Hill schools, the Parishioners of St. Stephen's Church and all those in town who donated gently used and new goods for Cradles to Crayons. The December Drive was very successful in raising winter supplies for underprivileged children throughout Massachusetts. We were overwhelmed with your generosity. Thank you for your support!

There are over 305,000 children in need in the area and last year Cradles to Crayons was able to reach out to about 45,000, and would like to reach 50,000 this year. Clearly there is an ongoing need, and particularly during these cold climactic and economic times. If you have anything more that you would like to donate to Cradles to Crayons please review their drop off location and times at www.cradlestocrayons.org

Many thanks for all your support!

The Arnold Family and the Cohasset PSO (Parent School Organization)

Police Association very much appreciated

TO THE EDITOR:

On behalf of Cohasset Elder Affairs and senior citizens in Cohasset, I would like to publicly thank the Cohasset Police Association for the delicious Spaghetti Luncheon they recently prepared for our seniors. On Jan. 14th, more than 80 seniors and guests gathered at the Lightkeepers and were feted with scrumptious pasta, homemade meatballs, sauce, and salad, as well as personally decorated cakes for dessert. In addition, background music was provided, in abstentia by Dean Martin and Frank Sinatra.

Special thanks go to Cohasset Police Officer Gregg Hartnett, for planning and orchestrating this entire event. Many hours of preparation and coordination went into this occasion to make it the huge success that it was. Officer Hartnett is also a member of the Cohasset Elder Affairs Board of Directors. We sincerely appreciate his involvement, and also that of his father, Teddy Hartnett, who prepared the delicious meatballs and sauce. Teddy was also responsible for kitchen discipline and serving supervision.

With the participation and support of the entire Cohasset Police Department, this truly was a fun day of camaraderie and good will.

A plaque was also presented to the association on behalf of Cohasset Elder Affairs that read in part: "This certificate is presented to the Cohasset Police Association in recognition of your excellence in public service, promoting safety and security, and dedicated support consistently beyond the call of duty, to our elders."

The Board and Staff at Cohasset Elder Affairs extend deep appreciation to the Cohasset Police Association for their interest and support of all that we do for the seniors our community. We are truly blessed.

Coral S. Grande, Director,
Cohasset Elder Affairs

Paying taxes now will help avoid borrowing

TO THE EDITOR:

Amid all of the Holiday Greetings in your mailbox in December, there was an envelope conspicuously missing. The Cohasset Real Estate Tax Bill for payments due on February 1.

Even though the FY11 property assessments have been certified by the state, the town cannot set the tax rate without having a balanced budget. Without the tax rate, the bills cannot be calculated and sent.

How have we come to this pass? The immediate answer is the deficit discovered in the water department last spring that still has not been resolved. Currently the department is undergoing a costly audit.

This problem is systematic of how our elected and appointed boards have been conducting business for several years in Cohasset. Questions have not been asked and concerns by townspeople have been ignored. Yearly audits and management letters plus month to date statements that indicated the water department crisis as one among many other town problems were never looked at for years by our elected and appointed officials. Everything was left in the hands of the paid professionals.

Now the rubber has hit the road. We have a choice to not pay this quarterly bill until we receive it some time in the undetermined future and allow the town to borrow the money to keep us going and get us deeper in debt. Don't forget the borrowing comes with interest and instead of paying interest that money could be used for items like town services, school textbooks, library supplies.

Or we can take the appeal made at the Jan 4th Selectmen's meeting and come together as a community by voluntarily writing a check to the town in the amount of the last payment that was due on Nov. 1.

I am hoping that your checks will join mine in the Treasurer's office.

Leonora C. Jenkins
198 Jerusalem Road.

Cohasset Democrats to host caucus Feb. 5

Registered Democrats in Cohasset will hold their annual caucus at Paul Pratt Public Library, 35 Ripley Road, at 9 a.m., on Saturday, Feb. 5, to elect four delegates and three alternates to the 2011 Massachusetts Democratic Convention. Delegates will be divided equally between men and women.

This year's Action Agenda Convention will take place on Saturday, June 4, at Tsongas Arena in Lowell. All Massachusetts Democrats chosen at their caucuses will gather to adopt a new Action Agenda outlining grassroots and party building initiatives to build on successes this year and to prepare for the 2012 elections.

The caucus is open to all registered Democrats in Cohasset. All ballots will be written and secret. Those not elected as delegate and/or alternate, who meet the qualifications, may apply to be add-on delegates in the following categories: Youth, minority and disabled.

Discrimination on the basis of race, sex, age, color, creed, national origin, disability, religion, ethnic identity, sexual orientation or economic status in the conduct of the caucus is strictly prohibited. Challenges to the delegate selection process can be filed with the Massachusetts Democratic Party, 56 Roland St., Suite 203, Boston, MA 02129 no later than 10 days after the caucus date.

HEALTH NOTES

Hearing aid use on the increase

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Listen up! At some point in your life, the chances are that you'll be needing a hearing aid. Health notes will never recommend a particular name, or even a manufacturer; moreover in the case of hearing aids, even a configuration, nor where it should be situated on your body. Devices affecting one's senses like hearing aids and glasses are, as in clothing; a manifestation of the individual, dependant on one's personality as well as his health and bodily makeup.

How do they work? Hearing aids are electromechanical devices, usually situated near the ear. They transmit and amplify acoustical signals to the tympanic nerve in the ear. Between the vibrations in the air around an individual and the nerve, sound causes vibrations of parts in the hearing aid itself that are amplified and repeated as larger vibrations of the eardrum, a membrane protecting the internal parts of the ear from water, etc. Sound then causes small posts attached to the tympanic nerve to vibrate with frequency and amplitude according to their length and thickness. The tympanic nerve picks up these sounds and transmits them to the brain as sound.

Prevalence: The number of Americans with a hearing loss has doubled over the past 30 years. Data from federal surveys estimate that 28.6 million Americans had an auditory disorder in 2000. Sudden sensor neural hearing loss (SSHL), also known as sudden deafness, is rapid loss of hearing that can occur over a few hours, or over a period of several days, the cause of which can be found in about 15 percent of patients. The estimated yearly incidence of SSHL is 15 to 25 cases per 100,000 persons. Noise exposure has long been known to be a risk factor for hearing loss. More than 30 million Americans are exposed to hazardous sound levels on a regular basis.

The number of Americans with a hearing loss has doubled over the past 30 years.

Common factors affecting hearing: Age, long-term exposure to environmental noise, genetic disease, illness; medications; exposure to ototoxic chemicals: Long term hearing loss from drugs. Side effects of ototoxic drugs are more common than generally imagined; approximately 743 drugs have some ototoxicity; particularly those for other ailments. Not only drugs taken for chemotherapy and life-threatening infections, but common things — an ingrown toenail, a sty on one's eye, irregular heartbeat, high blood pressure, etc. It's important to become aware of all effects of drugs you take.

What should you do if you find you need sound enhancement? Don't ignore and don't treat until and unless you have a plan.

Upon finding the need, get a specialist to confirm the problem and request a written plan detailing the methods and medication to be used. Don't forget to dispose of medications you no longer need. Bring them to a local dispensary or facility for such disposal. Improper disposal may put such drugs in the wrong hands. Officials in some municipalities affix a label on unused drugs. Get expert opinion. Among other concerns, have your doctor recommend an audiologist, and be examined.

Travel/sedentary/athletics/exercise routine, changes? Increasingly lifestyle changes affect healthy living; your medication should keep up with your lifestyle.

Steve Bobo is a long-time member of the Cohasset Board of Health.

EXTRA in YOUR MARINER

Extra! Extra! Read all about it

FOR THE RECORD

GREGORY MATHIS

There are some newspaper stereotypes that have stood the test of time.

Granted, none of them are true, but that's beside the point.

The one myth I want to set the record straight on is the editor-in-chief does not have a bottle of whiskey or scotch tucked away in the top desk drawer ready to celebrate nailing a big story or hitting another deadline. For better or worse, that's not the way the modern newsroom operates. At least not ours.

Another archetypal image is that of a paper boy standing on the street corner with a newspaper raised high in the air, screaming at the top of his lungs to passersby, "Extra, extra, read all about it." Most of the time, the person hawking the newspaper was alerting people to an "extra" edition of the newspaper. Back in those days, it meant some big event happened since the last paper was printed. That was so long ago television was black and white and Internet wasn't around to compete for the news. Imagine that!

Times have certainly changed. Televisions are now available in 3D high definition and the Web has news at your fingertips whenever you want it.

Even the word "extra" has a different meaning, at least as it pertains to the above-mentioned scenario. We understand people aren't looking to community newspapers for breaking news or waiting several days to find out the latest big stories in town. We have our Wicked Local websites to get that information out to our readers in most cases as news is happening.

But there is value in your community newspaper. In fact there's Extra value.

As wonderful as the websites have been for us in getting news to you immediately, they still cannot provide some of the popular and "clipable" features our readers find in their community newspaper.

You won't walk into a school and see computer page printouts of 10 or 12 photographs hanging on a bulletin board in the hall. But you will find full-page photo spreads clipped from a recent issue of the newspaper capturing kids and teachers in action in the classroom or at an assembly.

Walk into your neighbor's kitchen and you might see that all-scholastic article featuring a photo and write up on their son or daughter under a magnet attached to the fridge.

A few weeks back, I asked why people still read newspapers. The most common response was that people still like holding a newspaper in their hand. They enjoy being able to take their time with their hometown news over several days. And they like to cut out articles, photos, or school lunch menus, pin them up, put them in a scrapbook or send the page or part of the page to a relative in another part of the country.

For those reasons and more, your community newspaper still has a lot of extra value. And we're going to prove it to you.

Beginning this week in many of our newspapers, and rolling out in all of them soon, we're launching a campaign called "Extra." Wherever you see the Extra logo, you'll see content that you won't find online or anywhere else except your community newspaper. Extra could be in-depth feature stories, "Meet Your Neighbor" Q and As, columns, games and puzzles, All-Scholastic teams and more.

The point is that your community newspaper will include something extra to ensure you are getting extra value by being a reader. As that charge card company commercial once professed, membership has its privileges. Look for the "Extra" logo to realize the value of your community newspaper.

Cuba's long and interesting history

FAMOUS BIRTHDAYS

MARY KENNEDY

Feb 8, 1963: President Kennedy's trade embargo prohibits travel to Cuba.

Dec 12, 1963: Less than one month after Kennedy's assassination, Attorney-General Robert Kennedy proposes ending the travel ban, saying it "is inconsistent with traditional American liberties."

Sept 20, 2010: President Obama extends the embargo until September 2011, saying it "is in the national interest of the United States."

The first tourist stepped ashore on this island, about 93 miles from Florida, in 1492. Ever grateful to his sponsors King Ferdinand and Queen Isabella, Columbus named it Juana after their daughter. Already in residence were friendly natives who called their home Cubanacan.

Spain used the island as a supply base for ships and later imported African slaves to work the sugar and tobacco plantations. Fast forward to 1762 when the English marched in and occupied Havana. One year later Spain agreed to swap Florida for Cuba. During the 19th century the U.S. made repeated offers to buy the island. Spain refused to sell. Cubans yearned for independence.

Enter José Martí (born Jan. 28, 1853), who would become known as the Apostle of Cuban Independence. Outspoken even at age 16, his resentment of Spanish rule and hatred of slavery (legal in Cuba until 1886) got the teenager arrested and jailed for months. Journalist, professor, philosopher, poet, he was tireless in his promotion of Cuban independence, traveling and lecturing in the United States and Central America to raise funds for the Revolutionary Party.

In 1895, Cuban rebels revolted against their Spanish overlords. One 21-year-old English officer, Winston Churchill, decided to enjoy a winter respite in Cuba as war correspondent for the London Daily Graphic. Traveling with the Spanish army (and developing a lifelong love of Cuban cigars), he wrote of "wandering round and round in this endless humid jungle." José Martí, age 42, was killed, leading a company of himself and one other patriot in a brave but foolish charge against Spanish troops.

José Martí was born Jan. 28, 1853 in Havana, Cuba. Martí's resentment of Spanish rule and hatred of slavery (legal in Cuba until 1886) got the then teenager arrested and jailed for months.

In 1898 the battleship Maine, dispatched to rescue Americans living in Havana, exploded and sank in the harbor, killing 266 men. Whether by design or accident has never been determined. President McKinley appealed to Congress for authority to send troops to end the civil war. The House of Representatives voted 311 to 6 (the Senate vote was 42 to 35) in favor of supporting Cuban independence, while disclaiming any intention of annexing the island. Shortly thereafter, a young Teddy Roosevelt led the volunteer Rough Riders in the much-celebrated charge up San Juan Hill. War was declared in April 1898, and in July, Spain sued for peace. Cuba was finally independent. In theory. In actuality, Cuba was now an American protectorate.

Decades of Decadence: During the 1920s, it was only a short boat ride from Prohibition to party-time in Cuba. One popular travel guide, When It's Cocktail Time in Cuba, encouraged wealthy travelers to "Have one in Havana."

In 1934, the United States negotiated a 99-year lease with Cuban Dictator Batista on the naval base at Guantanamo. By the 1940s, a free flow of Hollywood stars, the Mafia, prostitution, drugs, and gambling, all contributed to Cuba's reputation as sinful, lawless and corrupt. It was common knowledge that Mafia "boss" Meyer Lansky deposited more than $3 million — a mere fraction of his own "take" — into Batista's Swiss bank account. Meanwhile, Batista's secret police routinely tortured protesters and the poor slept in the streets.

Finally, in 1959, La Revolucion Cubana, and the beginning of more than 50 years of Castro and communism. Americans in the past argued over Che Guevara, Bay of Pigs; more recently over Elian Gonzalez; and always over illegal cigars.

Today, the world waits while the controversy continues: Keep the embargo/lift the embargo; Cubans have excellent health care and water/Cubans suffer an extreme shortage of doctors and drinkable water. Apparently, Cubans are also waiting – for change. Most likely it will come only after Fidel (no one in Cuba calls him Castro) goes.

Ironically, among Cubans there is complete agreement on José Martí, considered their greatest leader, and revered by both sides of the Cuban political divide. Castro hails Martí as an ideologue of the Revolution, while Cubans in Miami name their anti-Castro broadcast stations Radio Martí and TV Martí.

Getting around without a car

SUSTAINABILITY

JUDETH VAN HAMM

At the beginning of this millennium I stopped owning a car. It was a choice between sinking more money into a vehicle that once had been a joy to own but had become expensive to care for, or not. I was also working in town and had the option of traveling by bicycle.

That choice has led me to explore many options for getting around. My life partner Michael Connelly and I began riding electric-assist bicycles that were made by Ford. We now group errands so that we rent a car from Enterprise once a month or less. (The off-season rental is about $30 for a weekend. Enterprise comes to our house to pick us up.) Friends offer rides to evening meetings. I carry the schedules for train, bus and ferry. A year ago we bought an electric street-legal four-seat neighborhood vehicle made by Club Car, a division of Ingersoll Rand, which is the world's largest manufacturer of electric vehicles.

I also have been looking into community-wide solutions for affordable, easy, safe, clean transportation.

In working on protecting the Weir River Estuary, I began to pay attention to George Washington Boulevard, which was built through the Estuary to connect Summer Street-Rockland Street to Paragon Park. This roadway is a challenge to walk across and has had fatal accidents. In April 2006 I organized a workshop presented at Jake's Seafood Restaurant by the Boston region's Central Transportation Planning Staff with members of MassHighway, Sen. Bob Hedlund, and people representing all the uses along the Boulevard. The help of Sen. Hedlund and Rep. Garrett Bradley eventually led to a $400,000 earmark in the state's 2008 Transportation Bond Bill for design and engineering to make the Summer-Rockland-George Washington route safer for motorists, bicyclists and pedestrians. Hull and Hingham are now preparing a Project Need Form to put those funds to work.

Through Sustainable South Shore, I brought together people from Hingham, Hull, Cohasset, Scituate and Norwell who, with the help of graduate students from the Conway School of Design, published a South Shore Greenway plan for linking bicycle routes and open spaces in the five communities.

I also searched for zero-emission transit. Through the U.S. Clean Cities program, I found used electric rubber-wheel trolleys for sale in New Haven, Conn. They were available because the municipal parking lot that underwrote the downtown shuttle service was being developed. But I found out that paying for the driver and daily battery maintenance would require every seat on every trip to be occupied. Not realistic.

My search on the Internet for zero-emission transit led to the discovery of the concept of Personal Rapid Transit (PRT). The closest things I was familiar with were a gondola at a ski resort and the little trains at some airports. Imagine being able to go to a station within easy walking distance of your house and always being able to find a computer-controlled pod waiting for you that would chauffeur you directly to your destination. I was intrigued.

In looking through the various PRT efforts being made around the world, I came across JPods. I began conversations with Bill James, president of the company, who lives in Minneapolis, to see if JPods might work for this region. The more I learned the more interested I became. You can find out about this new form of transportation by searching the Internet for "Personal Rapid Transit" and by going to www.jpods.com.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Honoring his legacy

"I have been to the mountaintop..."

Martin Luther King Jr. delivered his legendary speech about his vision of the Promised Land as the clock ticked toward his assassination.

From his spiritual vantage point, the Rev. King clearly saw the day when people of different races and creeds would be united in equality.

On April 3, 1968, on the day before his death on a balcony of the Lorraine Motel in Memphis Tenn., King gave this promise:

"We, as a people, will get to the Promised Land."

During his lifetime, King strove for changes in the law that became landmarks along the way, notably the 1964 Civil Rights Act outlawing discrimination and the Voting Rights Act passed on Aug. 4, 1965.

The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., a Baptist minister born in Atlanta on Jan. 15, 1929, became an icon in the struggle for civil rights for African Americans.

On Dec. 10, 1964, he won the Nobel Peace Prize.

King inspired countless followers and achieved hard-won victories through his belief in non-violent protest.

King saw jail time as a result of this philosophy. In October 1960, he was imprisoned for taking part in a sit-in in Atlanta. Three years later, on April 16, during a civil rights protest, he sat behind bars in Birmingham, where he wrote the famous "Letter from Birmingham Jail" on civil disobedience.

When King and his followers endured violence without striking back, some thought that King was passive.

Yet while his actions appeared physically passive, his actions were spiritually aggressive.

King drew criticism by some civil rights activists because the people he envisioned marching toward the Promised Land were not only African Americans, but people of all races and creeds who longed justice and equality.

On Aug. 28, 1963, during the March on Washington for Jobs and Freedom, King delivered his "I have a dream" speech.

On Monday, Cohasset commemorated Martin Luther King Jr. Day with the annual breakfast sponsored by Cohasset clergy and the Cohasset Diversity Committee. On Tuesday, Deer Hill School held an assembly about Dr. King's work as a civil rights leader.

In his honor, we applaud those who carry on King's work without expecting praise.

All over town, there are unsung heroes and heroines who continue King's legacy by living his principles.

There is no way to number our neighbors who quietly fight poverty, promote peace in the community, and refuse to accept even the smallest injustice as "the way things are."

When someone donates to the food pantry, plucks a star from a Christmas tree to buy a present for a needy child, or donates gently worn clothing to nonprofit organizations, they are fighting poverty.

When someone mediates a neighborhood dispute, joins a prayer vigil, or gives a gentle response to the angry words of another, they are advancing peace.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Grateful for support

TO THE EDITOR:

We would like to extend a heartfelt thank you to the students/families of the Joseph Osgood and Deer Hill schools, the Parishioners of St. Stephen's Church and all those in town who donated gently used and new goods for Cradles to Crayons. The December Drive was very successful in raising winter supplies for underprivileged children throughout Massachusetts. We were overwhelmed with your generosity. Thank you for your support!

There are over 305,000 children in need in the area and last year Cradles to Crayons was able to reach out to about 45,000, and would like to reach 50,000 this year. Clearly there is an ongoing need, and particularly during these cold climactic and economic times. If you have anything more that you would like to donate to Cradles to Crayons please review their drop off location and times at www.cradlestocrayons.org

Many thanks for all your support!

The Arnold Family and the Cohasset PSO (Parent School Organization)

Police Association very much appreciated

TO THE EDITOR:

On behalf of Cohasset Elder Affairs and senior citizens in Cohasset, I would like to publicly thank the Cohasset Police Association for the delicious Spaghetti Luncheon they recently prepared for our seniors. On Jan. 14th, more than 80 seniors and guests gathered at the Lightkeepers and were feted with scrumptious pasta, homemade meatballs, sauce, and salad, as well as personally decorated cakes for dessert. In addition, background music was provided, in abstentia by Dean Martin and Frank Sinatra.

Special thanks go to Cohasset Police Officer Gregg Hartnett, for planning and orchestrating this entire event. Many hours of preparation and coordination went into this occasion to make it the huge success that it was. Officer Hartnett is also a member of the Cohasset Elder Affairs Board of Directors. We sincerely appreciate his involvement, and also that of his father, Teddy Hartnett, who prepared the delicious meatballs and sauce. Teddy was also responsible for kitchen discipline and serving supervision.

With the participation and support of the entire Cohasset Police Department, this truly was a fun day of camaraderie and good will.

A plaque was also presented to the association on behalf of Cohasset Elder Affairs that read in part: "This certificate is presented to the Cohasset Police Association in recognition of your excellence in public service, promoting safety and security, and dedicated support consistently beyond the call of duty, to our elders."

The Board and Staff at Cohasset Elder Affairs extend deep appreciation to the Cohasset Police Association for their interest and support of all that we do for the seniors our community. We are truly blessed.

Cohasset Elder Affairs

Paying taxes now will help avoid borrowing

TO THE EDITOR:

Amid all of the Holiday Greetings in your mailbox in December, there was an envelope conspicuously missing. The Cohasset Real Estate Tax Bill for payments due on February 1.

Even though the FY11 property assessments have been certified by the state, the town cannot set the tax rate without having a balanced budget. Without the tax rate, the bills cannot be calculated and sent.

How have we come to this pass? The immediate answer is the deficit discovered in the water department last spring that still has not been resolved. Currently the department is undergoing a costly audit.

This problem is systematic of how our elected and appointed boards have been conducting business for several years in Cohasset. Questions have not been asked and concerns by townspeople have been ignored. Yearly audits and management letters plus month to date statements that indicated the water department crisis as one among many other town problems were never looked at for years by our elected and appointed officials. Everything was left in the hands of the paid professionals.

Now the rubber has hit the road. We have a choice to not pay this quarterly bill until we receive it some time in the undetermined future and allow the town to borrow the money to keep us going and get us deeper in debt. Don't forget the borrowing comes with interest and instead of paying interest that money could be used for items like town services, school textbooks, library supplies.

Or we can take the appeal made at the Jan 4th Selectmen's meeting and come together as a community by voluntarily writing a check to the town in the amount of the last payment that was due on Nov. 1.

I am hoping that your checks will join mine in the Treasurer's office.

Leonora C. Jenkins
198 Jerusalem Road.

HEALTH NOTES

Hearing aid use on the increase

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Listen up! At some point in your life, the chances are that you'll be needing a hearing aid. Health notes will never recommend a particular name, or even a manufacturer; moreover in the case of hearing aids, even a configuration, nor where it should be situated on your body. Devices affecting one's senses like hearing aids and glasses are, as in clothing; a manifestation of the individual, dependant on one's personality as well as his health and bodily makeup.

How do they work? Hearing aids are electromechanical devices, usually situated near the ear. They transmit and amplify acoustical signals to the tympanic nerve in the ear. Between the vibrations in the air around an individual and the nerve, sound causes vibrations of parts in the hearing aid itself that are amplified and repeated as larger vibrations of the eardrum, a membrane protecting the internal parts of the ear from water, etc. Sound then causes small posts attached to the tympanic nerve to vibrate with frequency and amplitude according to their length and thickness. The tympanic nerve picks up these sounds and transmits them to the brain as sound.

Prevalence: The number of Americans with a hearing loss has doubled over the past 30 years. Data from federal surveys estimate that 28.6 million Americans had an auditory disorder in 2000. Sudden sensor neural hearing loss (SSHL), also known as sudden deafness, is rapid loss of hearing that can occur over a few hours, or over a period of several days, the cause of which can be found in about 15 percent of patients. The estimated yearly incidence of SSHL is 15 to 25 cases per 100,000 persons. Noise exposure has long been known to be a risk factor for hearing loss. More than 30 million Americans are exposed to hazardous sound levels on a regular basis.

The number of Americans with a hearing loss has doubled over the past 30 years.

Common factors affecting hearing: Age, long-term exposure to environmental noise, genetic disease, illness; medications; exposure to ototoxic chemicals: Long term hearing loss from drugs. Side effects of ototoxic drugs are more common than generally imagined; approximately 743 drugs have some ototoxicity; particularly those for other ailments. Not only drugs taken for chemotherapy and life-threatening infections, but common things — an ingrown toenail, a sty on one's eye, irregular heartbeat, high blood pressure, etc. It's important to become aware of all effects of drugs you take.

What should you do if you find you need sound enhancement? Don't ignore and don't treat until and unless you have a plan.

Upon finding the need, get a specialist to confirm the problem and request a written plan detailing the methods and medication to be used. Don't forget to dispose of medications you no longer need. Bring them to a local dispensary or facility for such disposal. Improper disposal may put such drugs in the wrong hands. Officials in some municipalities affix a label on unused drugs. Get expert opinion. Among other concerns, have your doctor recommend an audiologist, and be examined.

Travel/sedentary/athletics/exercise routine, changes? Increasingly lifestyle changes affect healthy living; your medication should keep up with your lifestyle.

Steve Bobo is a long-time member of the Cohasset Board of Health.

EXTRA in YOUR MARINER

Extra! Extra! Read all about it

FOR THE RECORD
GREGORY MATHIS

There are some newspaper stereotypes that have stood the test of time.

Granted, none of them are true, but that's beside the point.

The one myth I want to set the record straight on is the editor-in-chief does not have a bottle of whiskey or scotch tucked away in the top desk drawer ready to celebrate nailing a big story or hitting another deadline. For better or worse, that's not the way the modern newsroom operates. At least not ours.

Another archetypal image is that of a paper boy standing on the street corner with a newspaper raised high in the air, screaming at the top of his lungs to passersby, "Extra, extra, read all about it." Most of the time, the person hawking the newspaper was alerting people to an "extra" edition of the newspaper. Back in those days, it meant some big event happened since the last paper was printed. That was so long ago television was black and white and Internet wasn't around to compete for the news. Imagine that!

Times have certainly changed. Televisions are now available in 3D high definition and the Web has news at your fingertips whenever you want it.

Even the word "extra" has a different meaning, at least as it pertains to the above-mentioned scenario. We understand people aren't looking to community newspapers for breaking news or waiting several days to find out the latest big stories in town. We have our Wicked Local websites to get that information out to our readers in most cases as news is happening.

But there is value in your community newspaper. In fact there's Extra value.

As wonderful as the websites have been for us in getting news to you immediately, they still cannot provide some of the popular and "clipable" features our readers find in their community newspaper.

You won't walk into a school and see computer page printouts of 10 or 12 photographs hanging on a bulletin board in the hall. But you will find full-page photo spreads clipped from a recent issue of the newspaper capturing kids and teachers in action in the classroom or at an assembly.

Walk into your neighbor's kitchen and you might see that all-scholastic article featuring a photo and write up on their son or daughter under a magnet attached to the fridge.

A few weeks back, I asked why people still read newspapers. The most common response was that people still like holding a newspaper in their hand. They enjoy being able to take their time with their hometown news over several days. And they like to cut out articles, photos, or school lunch menus, pin them up, put them in a scrapbook or send the page or part of the page to a relative in another part of the country.

For those reasons and more, your community newspaper still has a lot of extra value. And we're going to prove it to you.

Beginning this week in many of our newspapers, and rolling out in all of them soon, we're launching a campaign called "Extra." Wherever you see the Extra logo, you'll see content that you won't find online or anywhere else except your community newspaper. Extra could be in-depth feature stories, "Meet Your Neighbor" Q and As, columns, games and puzzles, All-Scholastic teams and more.

The point is that your community newspaper will include something extra to ensure you are getting extra value by being a reader. As that charge card company commercial once professed, membership has its privileges. Look for the "Extra" logo to realize the value of your community newspaper.

Cuba's long and interesting history

FAMOUS BIRTHDAYS

Feb 8, 1963: President Kennedy's trade embargo prohibits travel to Cuba.

Dec 12, 1963: Less than one month after Kennedy's assassination, Attorney-General Robert Kennedy proposes ending the travel ban, saying it "is inconsistent with traditional American liberties."

Cuba was finally independent. In theory. In actuality, Cuba was now an American protectorate.

Decades of Decadence: During the 1920s, it was only a short boat ride from Prohibition to party-time in Cuba. One popular travel guide, When It's Cocktail Time in Cuba, encouraged wealthy travelers to "Have one in Havana."

In 1934, the United States negotiated a 99-year lease with Cuban Dictator Batista on the naval base at Guantanamo. By the 1940s, a free flow of Hollywood stars, the Mafia, prostitution, drugs, and gambling, all contributed to Cuba's reputation as sinful, lawless and corrupt. It was common knowledge that Mafia "boss" Meyer Lansky deposited more than $3 million — a mere fraction of his own "take" — into Batista's Swiss bank account. Meanwhile, Batista's secret police routinely tortured protesters and the poor slept in the streets.

Finally, in 1959, La Revolucion Cubana, and the beginning of more than 50 years of Castro and communism. Americans in the past argued over Che Guevara, Bay of Pigs; more recently over Elian Gonzalez; and always over illegal cigars.

Today, the world waits while the controversy continues: Keep the embargo/lift the embargo; Cubans have excellent health care and water/Cubans suffer an extreme shortage of doctors and drinkable water. Apparently, Cubans are also waiting – for change. Most likely it will come only after Fidel (no one in Cuba calls him Castro) goes.

Ironically, among Cubans there is complete agreement on José Martí, considered their greatest leader, and revered by both sides of the Cuban political divide. Castro hails Martí as an ideologue of the Revolution, while Cubans in Miami name their anti-Castro broadcast stations Radio Martí and TV Martí.

Getting around without a car

SUSTAINABILITY
JUDETH VAN HAMM

At the beginning of this millennium I stopped owning a car. It was a choice between sinking more money into a vehicle that once had been a joy to own but had become expensive to care for, or not. I was also working in town and had the option of traveling by bicycle.

That choice has led me to explore many options for getting around. My life partner Michael Connelly and I began riding electric-assist bicycles that were made by Ford. We now group errands so that we rent a car from Enterprise once a month or less. (The off-season rental is about $30 for a weekend. Enterprise comes to our house to pick us up.) Friends offer rides to evening meetings. I carry the schedules for train, bus and ferry. A year ago we bought an electric street-legal four-seat neighborhood vehicle made by Club Car, a division of Ingersoll Rand, which is the world's largest manufacturer of electric vehicles.

I also have been looking into community-wide solutions for affordable, easy, safe, clean transportation.

In working on protecting the Weir River Estuary, I began to pay attention to George Washington Boulevard, which was built through the Estuary to connect Summer Street-Rockland Street to Paragon Park. This roadway is a challenge to walk across and has had fatal accidents. In April 2006 I organized a workshop presented at Jake's Seafood Restaurant by the Boston region's Central Transportation Planning Staff with members of MassHighway, Sen. Bob Hedlund, and people representing all the uses along the Boulevard. The help of Sen. Hedlund and Rep. Garrett Bradley eventually led to a $400,000 earmark in the state's 2008 Transportation Bond Bill for design and engineering to make the Summer-Rockland-George Washington route safer for motorists, bicyclists and pedestrians. Hull and Hingham are now preparing a Project Need Form to put those funds to work.

Through Sustainable South Shore, I brought together people from Hingham, Hull, Cohasset, Scituate and Norwell who, with the help of graduate students from the Conway School of Design, published a South Shore Greenway plan for linking bicycle routes and open spaces in the five communities.

I also searched for zero-emission transit. Through the U.S. Clean Cities program, I found used electric rubber-wheel trolleys for sale in New Haven, Conn. They were available because the municipal parking lot that underwrote the downtown shuttle service was being developed. But I found out that paying for the driver and daily battery maintenance would require every seat on every trip to be occupied. Not realistic.

My search on the Internet for zero-emission transit led to the discovery of the concept of Personal Rapid Transit (PRT). The closest things I was familiar with were a gondola at a ski resort and the little trains at some airports. Imagine being able to go to a station within easy walking distance of your house and always being able to find a computer-controlled pod waiting for you that would chauffeur you directly to your destination. I was intrigued.

In looking through the various PRT efforts being made around the world, I came across JPods. I began conversations with Bill James, president of the company, who lives in Minneapolis, to see if JPods might work for this region. The more I learned the more interested I became. You can find out about this new form of transportation by searching the Internet for "Personal Rapid Transit" and by going to www.jpods.com.

'Daughters' join forces against domestic violence

By Cally Altholtz
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

On average every one in five women has been or currently is in an abusive relationship. Women and girls alike suffer from the impact this has on their lives, many lashing out or becoming clinically depressed.

My name is Cally Altholtz; I am a senior at Cohasset High School. During the past summer my friends, Marissa Brauer, a senior at Monson High School, Caitlin Danehy, a junior at Buckingham Browne and Nichols High School, and I created an organization called "daughters." We based the title off the John Mayer song "Daughters" in which he discusses the lifelong effects of abuse and the support that women need in order to feel empowered. Marissa's motivation for this came from stories she had heard and a general interest in making a difference to these women and girls lives. My interest came directly from one of my best friends. The week before Marissa and I began this process, my friend had revealed to me that the two-year-long relationship she had just ended had been one of mental, physical and sexual abuse. She was 17.

Immediately after hearing about this I knew I had to do something. At this point I was not quite sure. That very same week Marissa and I had attended a program called "women to women." There we met and heard stories from girls all over the world. At the end of the week we were given an assignment. Pick an issue in your own country and do something about it. At the time it seemed simple, but as we became more and more enveloped in our work we quickly realized this was a life long project.

We are building a website where girls and women can go to talk to others who are or have been in the same position. Also it provides a safe outlet for frustration anger and sorrow. On this website we will also provide the name and information of other services such as counselors, or shelters depending on the case.

From left: Caitlin Danehy, Cally Altholtz, and Marissa Brauer have formed an organization called "The Daughters Foundation" that will raise awareness about domestic violence.

We are building a website where girls and women can go to talk to others who are or have been in the same position. Also it provides a safe outlet for frustration anger and sorrow.

We want these girls to know that they are not alone and they do not deserve to endure even a moment of abuse in any form.

So from you we are asking for a simple donation in the form of a T-shirt, ticket, or simple money donation. In order to host a concert and make T-shirts to make people more aware of this ongoing problem we need to raise the money first. The "Daughters Foundation" will be hosting a concert in Arlington on May 15, 2011, from 5 to 10 p.m. The website will be up by the end of February and will have updates about money we have raised and future events. The T-shirts are being created by Goodwin graphics and the website is being built by Jackie Fitts.

If anyone would like to purchase a T-shit, ticket or make a donation you can reach me at iamadaughter@gmail.com or on my cell at 781-789-9686.

Steve Bowen to head back to space

Earlier this week, Cohasset's own hometown astronaut Steve Bowen was selected by NASA to be a mission specialist on STS-133, the next space shuttle mission targeted for launch on Feb. 24. This was not an expected assignment for Bowen. He replaces astronaut Tim Kopra, who was injured in a bicycle accident over the weekend.

This will be Bowen's third trip to space and he will add to his already impressive total of five spacewalks. He is also a highly decorated nuclear powered submarine Captain in the U.S. Navy. Bowen is a member of the Cohasset High Class of 1982.

Bowen will begin training this week with the STS-133 crew, which includes Commander Steve Lindsey, Pilot Eric Boe, and Mission Specialists Alvin Drew, Michael Barratt and Nicole Stott. Bowen also will train to perform the two planned spacewalks of the mission. He will join Alvin Drew to move a failed ammonia pump and perform other external configurations to the station. The crew change should not affect the mission's target launch date.

However, if the mission launch dates slips significantly for some unanticipated reason, it is possible astronaut Tim Kopra could rejoin the crew, said Peggy Whitson, chief of the Astronaut Office at NASA's Johnson Space Center in Houston in a press release on Wednesday.

Bowen was in Cohasset in December to visit and to speak with students at all three schools. He encouraged students to continue studying math, science and engineering.

State Rep. Garrett Bradley signed the pledge at the annual Martin Luther King Breakfast at St. Stephen's Church on Monday. The town-wide pledge event to stand up against bullying and to foster kindness is in full swing and will continue through the month of January. More than 1500 pledges have been signed to date. Residents may still sign pledge slips and receive "I Signed the Pledge" wristbands at Dependable Cleaners, The Good Sport, the South Shore Community Center and at the Town Recreation office at Cohasset Town Hall.

Sustainability Forum on Turkey Hill Wind Turbine

Steve Sloan and other representatives of The Trustees of Reservations will present their proposal to build a wind turbine on Turkey Hill at a forum titled, "Moving Toward Sustainability: The Turkey Hill Wind Turbine" at the Abbey Center on Feb. 7, at 7 p.m. As the proposed turbine site is located in Cohasset near the Hingham town line, the Abbey Center site at 16 Hull Street is an appropriate location for Cohasset and Hingham residents along Hull and East Streets to participate in TTOR's presentation addressing this project. REACH/Hingham, Responsible Energy Alternatives Coalition of Hingham, sponsor of this forum, has secured the February date for this meeting after several months of planning. In recent months at its open meetings, the Cohasset Planning Board has discussed TTOR's proposal and examined related engineering data at length. The Board has now closed its hearings as it begins deliberations on the TTOR application.

During several public meetings the Trustees have reviewed their rationale for building the turbine, as well as questions about the turbine's visual and audible effects, the construction process, and its impact on the Turkey Hill conservation area. Such matters will be discussed at the scheduled meeting. The Trustees are intent on reaching out to residents in the Route 228 corridor along East and Hull Streets close to the Route 3-A intersection. This forum will afford these residents, as well as those others in the Hull-Hingham-Cohasset area, an additional opportunity to learn about the proposal's particulars and to share their interests, concerns, and experiences. Everyone is welcome.

As recently as Oct. 27, 2010, REACH/Hingham sponsored a well-attended forum on TTOR's proposal at the Hingham Public Library, one of the many alternative-energy forums REACH has presented for Hingham residents over the years. REACH, the sponsor of this forum at the Abbey Center, endorses TTOR's proposal.

Deja Vu all over again

Deja Vu all over again

That's what it was like for the Cohasset varsity boys hockey team on Saturday night.

The last time that coach Bob Walsh's Skippers faced off against the Rockland Bulldogs at home, the Skippers outshot and out played the Bulldogs but came out with a 3-0 loss.

This time, Cohasset out shot Rockland 34-12 and came up with only one goal while Rockland scored 4 for a 4-1 Cohasset loss.

"Rockland is a solid team with a good coach, and they were undefeated coming into tonight's game," explained coach Walsh. "For not having a big team, Mike Flaherty does a great job. We controlled the puck more but they won the 1-on-1 battles in the corners and in our end which doesn't really say a much for our team defense, but it's something we can and have to work on if we hope to do well this year."

Kinlin stung the Skippers again in the first with only one second left in the period.

The first goal was a breakaway with Kinlin just being patient; when our defense made a mistake with a puck at the Rockland blue line, Kinlin was off. Then the goal he scored late in the first period was a perfect example of how Rockland won the 1-on-1 battles when Kinlin kept playing hard to the whistle and scored with one second on the clock.

Rockland kept it going early in the second period when at 2:06 they tallied their third goal of the night by Kevin Sheehan beating the Cohasset defense yet again, this time coming out from behind the net.

It wasn't until, just about

GYMNASTICS

By a tenth

The Cohasset/Norwell gymnastics team traveled to Spectrum Gymnastics on January 11 to compete against Bridgewater Raynham, and the results couldn't have been closer, with Norwell/Cohasset winning by one tenth of a point, 123.55-123.45.

The gymnasts began on floor exercise.

Captain Sam Sprague took first and teammate Amber Silvia took a third place finish.

The Cohasset/Norwell team was down three tenths after their first rotation.

The girls then competed on the vault with Silvia placing first with an 8.7 and Sprague placing third with an 8.5.

At the half time Cohasset/Norwell was ahead by two tenths.

Heading into the third rotation uneven bars Sprague placed first with and 8.4 and the Cohasset/Norwell was still leading by a small margin.

"Beam was are last event. This is the make it or break it," Cohasset/Norwell coach Ruthann Ardizzoni said. "This would determine the outcome of the meet"

It wasn't quite the Red Sox and 1918, but for a high school team it may well have been because 26 games is a long time to keep losing to the same team.

That was how it was for the Cohasset boys basketball team when it came to their one-sided rivalry with Abington.

The futility is over, and even with a loss at Mashpee on Tuesday night, the Cohasset boys basketball team is on the cusp of attaining a coveted goal for the season – making the MIAA Tournament after missing it a year ago.

Cohasset's win at Abington was the team's ninth of the season, leaving them needing just one victory to qualify for the tournament.

Cohasset will have another chance to do it tonight when they host Hull at 6:30 p.m.

Save me a seat on the bandwagon.

These guys are for real.

While it goes against the Patriot way, I'm going to go out on a limb and predict that Cohasset will be playing in March, or the last day or two in February.

From there, I won't make any predictions, but after watching them play recently, I was more than impressed.

Robert Jones is about as solid and exciting as any player I have seen in recent years, and as a team, coach Bo Ruggiero has these kids believing in themselves, and more importantly,

Streaking into big quad

By William Wassersug
WWASSERS@CNC.COM

The Cohasset wrestling team has had a fine, fine week with a three-match win streak to their credit.

Cohasset put together dual wins over Hanover and Norwell on Friday at Hanover, followed by a 30-26 win over Rockland on Wednesday that improved the Skippers to 7-4-1 as they had into a huge quad meet on Saturday at Southeast Voc. Tech.

That meet face them off with Southeast Voc. Tech, Tri County, Bristol-Plymouth and Bristol Aggie.

Against Norwell, Cohasset won 46-30, while they took a 39-33 win over Hanover.

Nick Tangherlini won at 140 and John Mills picked up his first varsity pin of the season.

Thomas Flibotte also won with a pin at 171.

"It was 46-36," Cohasset coach Torin Sweeney said. "It was never that close. We had it wrapped up early, so we were able to give some kids a chance to wrestle."

Against Hanover, Berube won his second match of the night at 112.

At 125, Axel Sepella had a pin and Justin Yeager won by pin at 160.

The Rockland meet had some challenges for individual wrestlers.

Helbock bumped up to 125 to face Billy Gray, one of the top wrestlers in the area, and Helbock pulled out a 9-3 victory.

South Shore Hoop it Up, Week 4

We are coming up on the halfway point of the season, and quite a few South Shore area teams have put themselves in a position to make a tournament run, and several are in the hunt for league championships.

For the Class of 2011, enjoy what is left of your final season. Before you know it, the buzzer will sound for the final time, and you will be passing in your uniforms. At the risk of sounding like a cliché, these truly are some of the best times of your life. When you take the court this week, here is a bit of advice. At Weymouth, we call it LAST PLAY!!

You cannot be quiet, you can't be unemotional, play each and every play as if it where your last, or it will be.

Outstanding performances

Tyler Park (22 points) and Sam Malone (20 points) led Scituate to a 87-67 win over Hingham

Led by Robert Jones (30 points) Cohasset snapped a 26-game losing streak to Abington

Didjoe Matumona had 33 points and 14 rebounds as Holbrook beat West Bridgewater 80-67

Amanda Hawkesworth had a career-high 31 points as Abington beat Rockland

Soccer heaven in Baltimore

KNOCK ON WOOD

RYAN WOOD

Soccer may not be the most favorite sport in America. Actually, it probably ranks fifth or sixth in popularity out of all sports here. But you wouldn't know that if you were in Baltimore last week as more than 10,000 people descended upon the city for the 69th annual National Soccer Coaches Association of America (NSCAA) Convention.

The only way to describe the five-day convention is that it's a massive gathering of coaches and players from youth to the professional level, and they're all there to, well, talk soccer. I met some friends and fellow writers there, headed into the Baltimore Convention Center (situated right in front of Camden Yards), and as someone pointed out, "It's like another city in here." Someone else called the convention, "the Disney World for soccer people." It really was soccer heaven.

The exhibit hall was massive. We're talking 10 rows, 10-15 deep with exhibitors from all over the world. Some were there to promote the latest in a line of products. There were representatives from a number of leagues such as United Soccer Leagues and the WPSL. Fox Soccer Channel was there and even did a couple live spots from the exhibit hall. I met some great people from SoccerPlus, Generation UCAN, AFC Bournemouth, AC Milan, We Got Soccer, the Dana Cup – I could go on for days. And speaking of days, if you go to one of these conventions, you need to stay more than one day. There's just so much to do. I found that out – I think I only visited have of the booths in the exhibit hall.

In addition to the exhibit hall, there were a number of clinics, the Major League Soccer and Women's Professional Soccer drafts, meetings, and awards ceremonies, including one that honored high school All-Americans. We had two All-Americans from our area – Duxbury's Melissa Gavin and Whitman-Hanson's Samantha Mewis. Everywhere you looked, you saw a big name player or coach, from Claudio Reyna (former U.S. Men's National Team, Manchester City, and Red Bull New York midfielder), Tab Ramos (former USMNT and Metro Stars midfielder), Kristine Lilly (former U.S. Women's National Team and Boston Breakers midfielder), Stanford's Christen Press (the 2010 Mac Hermman trophy winner), the 2011 Major League Soccer Draft class (including five of the top 10 selections who were all from National Champion Akron University), Los Angeles Galaxy Head Coach and former U.S. coach Bruce Arena, Randy Waldrum, who coached the Notre Dame women's soccer team to the 2010 National Championship, and Sports Illustrated soccer writer Grant Wahl. The list went on forever.

I met a number of other journalists (most of us had to introduce ourselves as our Twitter names, which was kind of funny). I networked, met coaches and GMs, almost got hit by a bus and Mack truck walking to the convention, which would've been tragic in more ways than one – the two people I was with were professional soccer players (I'll withhold the names, but one played in the WPS and in top-flight leagues in Brazil and Sweden, and the other is a member of Ireland's Women's National Team).

Don't expect to get much sleep when you go to a convention like this. You sleep, you lose. You'll miss out on a myriad of events. A bunch of us went to the WPS Draft. I was sitting alongside some of the best soccer writers in the world from places you may have never heard of, but should start paying attention to now, including All White Kit, Fake Sigi, Virginia Online Soccer News, Our Game Magazine, Equalizer, Pitch Side View, and World Soccer Reader.

I accomplished a lot in 24 hours, and I came home with some pretty sweet swag – T-shirts, soccer balls, magazines, scarves, enough pens to hand out to everyone in the office. The NSCAA puts together this convention every year, and even though I'd never been before until this past weekend, I'd be willing to guess that this was one of the best of all time. Next year, I'm staying more than one day. If you've never been, book your trip to Kansas City for next year's convention now.

halfway through the second period that Cohasset got on the board with a goal from Junior John Collins assisted by Anders Goetz and Brian Scott.

"JC, Eves and Goetzie had been working hard all night but had little to show for it," remarked Walsh. "Usually they're moving so well in and out of the slot, they're hard to contain. They just couldn't buy a goal and there wasn't much in the way of help coming from the rest of the team."

Finishing the second period down 3-1 isn't something that the Skippers have worried about before since they have always been a team that has risen to the challenge. At 3:36 of the third period, Rockland's Chris Carchedi scored making the score 4-1.

"We really needed to score in the third", said Coach Walsh.

Unfortunately, junior defenseman and assistant captain Sean McKenna went down in the third period. At the time, it appeared to be a fractured collarbone.

"Sean has been pretty much our most physical player these past couple of seasons. He's strong and hard to move but he took a bad hit on the boards and had to come off the ice", said Walsh. "He ended up going to the hospital for x-rays that later proved to be a bad contusion on the shoulder. He'll be out for maybe a couple of games but even at the games, he's very vocal and a good leader in the [locker] room.

"There are typically very few things a coach can take out of a game like this", said Walsh. "One guy who really played, what I would consider to be, his best game so far, was freshman defenseman Mickey Barry. Mick, like Sean McKenna, was a guy who pretty much played forward all his young career but has really taken to his role as a defenseman. I have a lot of respect for a guy who can make that switch. Last night, he (Barry) played a great game and a game that could have been a lot worse if he wasn't out there."

After dropping to fourth place in the South Shore League following last night's loss, the Skippers faced off on Wednesday night against league rival Carver / Sacred Heart.

The Skippers won 4-2 to improve to 6-3-1 (4-2-1 league).

matches, Thomas Flibotte lost 1-0 to Rockland's Brian Harrington in a 189-match.

"We bumped Thomas up to get him some great competition," Sweeney said. "Brian Harrington is Rockland's top wrestler. It was a tremendous back-and-forth match. One of them would look like he was about to score and the other would counter. They both did it. It was a great match, great competition for Thomas."

Sweeney is happy with the way things have progressed this season.

"I'm really pleased," he said. "The numbers have stayed good and the team is coming along at the right time."

To emphasize the point, Sweeney pointed out a junior varsity tournament on Sunday in Pembroke where nine JV wrestlers placed.

playing solid, fundamental basketball.

To back that up, here are a few statistics for the Abington game.

As a team, Cohasset made 15-of-19 free throws.

Jones made nine of 18 shots from the floor for 30 points. He made 11-of-12 freebies and only turned the ball over three times. He also had seven assists.

Fellow captain Sam Richardson also had a big game with 18 points, four rebounds and all three shots from the stripe.

Shane Haggerty, Cohasset's 6-foot sophomore forward hit 4-of-5 shots from the floor for 10 points.

Haggerty added five defensive boards and three assists.

Rebounding was a strong point for Cohasset.

Kyrel Jaundoo had 15 rebounds, 10 defensive and five off the offensive glass.

Robbie Mahoney was also active on the boards with 8 defensive rebounds, 10 total. He was also the guy who worked against Abington's big man.

The whole team contributed at some point.

Christian Davis, a 5 '9" sophomore swing man hit a big three pointer and Joe Buckley, Cohasset's 6'1" freshman forward came off the bench and contributed a hoop in the fourth quarter run.

Point is, if you haven't had a chance to check these kids out, do it soon.

If you're a Cohasset basketball fan, you already know about the girls.

They had a tough loss to what has quickly become a very good Norwell team last week.

Still, I am predicting Cohasset will still be a big factor at Tourney time.

The girls are also very deep, play great fundamental basketball and Carli Haggerty has put up some eye popping numbers.

A few things to toss out.

Cohasset and Norwell have a combined gymnastics team.

Can we call them the Sklippers or Sclippers as an alternate spelling.

Or Hanover and Cohasset's combined girls hockey team. How about the Skindians or the Indippers if Skindians is politically incorrect for any reason.

Cohasset/Hull cross country Skirates, or a small change to Skyrates ... I'm just saying...

Just like any Patriots fan, I am still trying to figure out what happened to the Patriots on Sunday.

I hope I didn't jinx the Patriots when I told my wife, who was in Las Vegas over the weekend to hit a casino and put a couple of dollars on the Jets with the points.

She didn't, so I don't even have that to soften the blow.

On the other hand, Jets coach Rex Ryan didn't put his foot in his mouth with all the bluster.

Apparently Wes Welker did.

Note to Patriots – go get some better players. Yes 14-2 was amazing, but one and done this year hurt even more than last year.

Fortunately I have other things to worry about than football. Clark Kent is almost Superman (Smallville, Friday's at 8 p.m. on the CW – watch it while you can).

A note to the guy in the other big Boston paper bad mouthing upset fans, lighten up, take an anger management class, buy a life, stare at your Palin poster for a few minutes and calm down. There, I said it.

Only a month until pitchers and catchers report.

I always like that day because it reminds me that this weather will be gone and there will be some warmth soon.

Have I mentioned I really hate snow, except on the slopes and maybe some smaller hills for sledding.

Sweet Relief to host open house on Feb. 5

Sweet Relief Nursery and Preschool, a private early education learning center at 38 Summer St., will host an open house for prospective families from 10 a.m. to noon, on Saturday, Feb. 5. This event is free of charge and open to the public. Parents and caregivers that attend the open house will receive additional information regarding Sweet Relief programs, a tour of the schoolhouse and meet director and owner Lyn Congdon Previte and her staff.

Sweet Relief, a home-based preschool environment, is licensed through the State of Massachusetts Department of Early Education and Care. In addition to its EEC accreditation, Sweet Relief is insured and occupies a new schoolhouse, a large fenced-in secure play yard and has a consistent emergent curriculum, which follows the Massachusetts Department of Education Curriculum Guidelines.

Previte has more than 20 years experience in early childhood education, holds licenses in CPR and first aid, regularly attends continuing education courses in early childhood development and recently studied American Sign Language. Working alongside Previte in the Sweet Relief classroom are Jofy Previte "Mr. Jofy" and Ashley Allen. Jofy is a state certified teacher assistant and teaches two days per week. Allen teaches with Previte three days per week and is currently working toward her bachelor's degree in elementary education. Previte, Mr. Jofy and Allen are also accompanied in the classroom by therapy dog, Barron "Bear." Bear has been a nurturing, soothing and valuable presence to many students enrolled in the Sweet Relief Program. Bear is licensed and registered with Therapy Dogs International.

The Sweet Relief curriculum works with the seasonal times of year. Students are given the tools and resources to combine their classroom lessons with hands-on learning opportunities, stimulating the senses and encompassing the element of playing to learn.

Lessons are reinforced and integrated using arts and crafts, music and books. Daily outdoor adventures provide students with an additional creative, physical and hands-on outlet.

Community service is another important element incorporated into the Sweet Relief programs. This year, Sweet Relief students collected more than 60 pounds of Halloween candy that was sent to troops serving in Afghanistan, and delivered a truckload of food to the Cohasset Food Pantry during the holiday season. In the spring, parents and students are invited to join the Sweet Relief team for the American Cancer Society's Relay For Life event.

The teacher-to-child ratio at Sweet Relief is one-to-five. Initial enrollment proposes a minimum of two or more sessions per week. The morning Toddler Program begins at 8:30 a.m. and concludes at noon, on Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays. The Toddler Program is designed for children ages 20 months through 2 years 9 months, and includes snack and lunch.

The afternoon Nursery Program, also including snack and lunch, begins at noon and concludes at 3:30 p.m. Children 2 years 9 months to 4 years old are eligible for the Nursery Program, which takes place Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday afternoons. Enrichment activities such as yoga, specialized reading instruction and music are a celebrated component of the Nursery Program.

A new Extended Day Program will now also be offered from 8:30 a.m. to 2 p.m., Mondays and Fridays, to all students age 4 and older, although, younger students capable of a longer program may be enrolled as well. This program is designed as a supplemental preschool program and will include snack, lunch, a rest period and enrichment activities.

For information regarding the Sweet Relief open house or have an information brochure sent, call Previte at 781-383-9723, email sweetrelief143@aol.com or visit the website at www.sweetreliefcohasset.com.

Thoughts about Health II course

LIFE AT CHS

NATALIE DIGNAM

...how necessary is a second health class when it is not a state requirement and takes the place of other classes?

It's been a slow week at CHS, with a shortened week and the possibility of a snow day this Friday (seniors, cross your fingers!). Most exciting, last night (Thursday) at 7 p.m., the band and chorus held the cabaret at Atlantica. Cabaret is a celebrated tradition at CHS that showcases the talent of our music department is a lot of fun for parents and students alike!

And with grades closing in a few short weeks, it's time to start thinking about second semester and new classes. For seniors, this will be a question of motivation, and, above all, how is it possible to take health? This year, a second year of health became a state recommendation for seniors in Massachusetts. However, scheduling conflicts have pretty much reduced Health II to an independent study or online course, which begs the question: how necessary is a second health class when it is not a state requirement and takes the place of other classes? Personally, I think Health II is an important class that will educate students about issues they may not otherwise be exposed to, but it needs to be made readily available and in-line with seniors' ambitious AP courses or other course requirements. For everybody else, second semester is a time to start again with new classes (and maybe some better grades).

Despite the long weekend and snow day, CHS is still brimming with activity. Best Buddies, a program in which high school students work with the South Shore Collaborative, located in the Middle School, had its second meeting this Wednesday. Best Buddies meets in the upper lobby almost every Wednesday after school and is always looking for new members! Also this week, Mr. Buckley's community service class visited an exhibit at the Cohasset Historical Society set up by their classmates. Prescott Coughlin and Whitney Jaffe collaborated in the creation of the World War I exhibition currently being held at the Historical Society. Amid displays of photographs, uniforms, and diary entries, students were allowed to experience the history of Cohasset first hand, and were even given access to the archives and some other artifacts held in storage in what many of us recognized as the children's section of the old Paul Pratt Library. The Spinnaker is in the works once again, and will be coming out this Valentine's Day. Belated congratulations to Carly Odliefson, on clarinet, and Will Choi, on cello, for their performances in the Senior District Orchestra. And lastly, congratulations to Tara Goodwin for receiving the DAR (Daughters of the American Revolution) Good Citizenship Award, the senior class is so happy to have you represent us!

An energetic group of about 50 Cohasset Middle School students in grades six to eight took to the stage to present "This is a test" in the One Act Play Festival last month.

Middle School theater program thriving

Students starred in 2010 One Act Play Festival

By Sally Sisson
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

What happens when a bigger than expected crowd auditions for a small one-act play? Here's one option: Put on two different one-act plays and cast all 50 kids.

That's just what Stephanie Noble, founder and director of the Cohasset Middle School (CMS) drama program, decided to do. She enlisted the help of parent volunteer Lisa Pratt, who has directed many plays over the years for the Cohasset Dramatic Club. Each took on a play and a couple dozen 12- to 14-year-old kids.

After two months of after-school rehearsals, the students presented the plays on Dec. 15 — during the school day for their peers and in an evening performance for families and friends. The 2010 One Act Play Festival featured The Audition (by Don Zolidis) and This Is a Test (by Stephen Gregg).

"There's so much the kids get out of this," said Stephanie. "They get an idea of how to be on stage, how to create a character, how to work as a team."

Stephanie says she enjoys working with middle school students in particular. "There's just so much I love about this age," she says. "The sense of innocence, the enthusiasm… Middle School kids are a lot of fun and have a lot of energy. At the same time they kind of understand the limits of where goofing around ends and getting serious begins. They're willing to put up with a lot of discipline… It's fascinating to me that they are willing to take on that responsibility."

"The greatest thing about them is that they are supportive of one another," added Lisa Pratt. "And whether they came into the project as friends or not, they worked extremely well together. The lines of friends and those who weren't necessarily 'friends' were definitely blurred."

Stephanie created the CMS drama program six years ago. She also heads the High School drama program, which is currently rehearsing for a play to be presented at the Massachusetts High School Drama Festival in March. At around the same time, she'll be casting for a CMS play to be presented at the Massachusetts Middle School Drama Festival later that spring.

Stephanie is excited about the enthusiasm for drama at the middle school level and hopes to see the momentum continue. Her experience has been that as students move to high school they become more reticent about taking to the stage, and also have more scheduling constraints due to sports.

Stephanie and Lisa are both strong champions of arts education. "Drama breeds confidence, builds self-esteem, speaking skills…" says Lisa. "It's an open and, in my experience, an accepting environment for many kids for whom sports and athletic pursuits are not where they can all excel. Drama is a great alternative.

"The arts, and theater particularly, cultivate skills and confidence that will serve anyone over a lifetime," she says. "Most will never participate in theater even as an active hobby, let alone a career, but the lessons of learning to speak confidently in front of a group, making eye contact, vocal strength — a speaking voice that serves a large room, memorization skills, and the focus that it takes to embody a character that is not your own — those are creative talents that one day will make sales presentations, write novels, analyze problems and understand people's motivations. The possible applications of these basic skills are truly endless."

During our Winter Window Diagnosis, our Thermal Leak Detectors:

- Use an infrared thermometer to help find those energy-wasting cold spots.
- Identify your most drafty windows, so you can then choose the six you want replaced and SAVE $1,000.
- Are most effectively used in the cold months, therefore schedule your FREE Thermal Leak Detector Analysis now.

During the winter, nobody wants to replace all of their windows, but for a limited time, save $1,000 when you replace just your six most-drafty windows.

And our Thermal Leak Detector Analysis will help identify your six worst windows—the ones you hate because they make your house so cold!

Most people don't realize that winter is actually one of the smartest times of the year to have new replacement windows installed. In the frigid, dry air, the wood framing surrounding your windows completely contracts, thereby creating the largest window frame openings. Your windows are then custom built to those specific dimensions and will have the tightest fit possible when installed.

SALOME'S STARS
FOR RELEASE WEEK OF
JAN. 31, 2011

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) The week continues to encourage the forming of new personal relationships and the shoring up of those that might be weakening. New contacts also dominate the workaday world.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) While the bold Bovine might want to move quickly to deal with sudden plan changes, it might be best to wait until you can come up with some solid facts behind the unexpected turn of events.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) It's a good week to consider how you'll move on matters both personal and professional. In either case, the more you know about them, the more likely it is that you'll make the right decisions.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) Although you might find more colleagues ready to support your plans, some of them could ask for changes you don't approve of. Be ready to defend your position if necessary.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) This is a good time for Leos and Leonas to think about opportunities that might be outside your usual interests. You could be surprised to find something well worth your consideration.

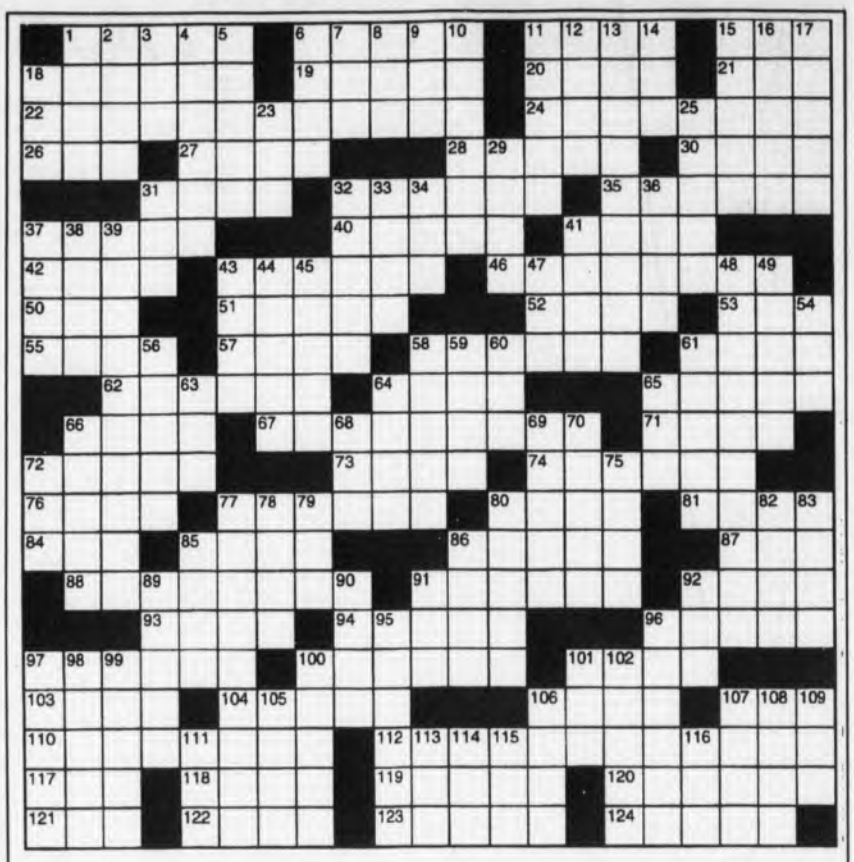
VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) You can turn a troublesome workplace issue to your advantage by prompting that Virgo penchant for preciseness to take over where all else has failed. An old friend makes contact.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) A friend's unexpected work-related news could be a wake-up call to get you to reassess your position. See if you need to make changes to strengthen your position at this time.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) You might want to review a decision to work alone on a project. You might see it as efficient and prudent, but some might see it as unnecessary secretiveness, even for a Scorpio.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) Don't be put off by a lukewarm response to a recent effort. Perhaps you didn't present a strong enough argument. Rebuild your case with more facts, and try again. Good luck.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) A surprise development in the early part of the week could be linked to an ongoing situation. Before you decide to take further action, consider calling for a group discussion.



AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) Your sensitive side helps you work through an emotionally difficult situation with a minimum of bruised feelings all around. A welcome change bows in by the week's end.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) While the week still favors new pursuits, some things from the past also make a claim for your attention. The weekend is open for good times with some of the people closest to you.

Here's How It Works:

Sudoku puzzles are formatted as a 9x9 grid, broken down into nine 3x3 boxes. To solve a sudoku, the numbers 1 through 9 must fill each row, column and box. Each number can appear only once in each row, column and box. You can figure out the order in which the numbers will appear by using the numeric clues already provided in the boxes. The more numbers you name, the easier it gets to solve the puzzle!

Rose Kennedy through the years

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

As daughter of a Boston mayor, wife of a banker and movie mogul turned World War II Ambassador, and mother of America's first Irish Catholic President and two U.S. Senators, Rose Fitzgerald Kennedy, who died in 1995 at age 104, had a front-row seat for some of the biggest events of the 20th century. Much has been said and written about Rose Kennedy – whose 1974 autobiography was titled "Times to Remember" – but most often it was by others. In "The Color of Rose," a new play having its world premiere this month at Boston's Emerson College, however, that storied life unfolds from Kennedy's perspective.

"When I was commissioned to write this piece, I read a ton of material and enveloped myself in Rose Kennedy and the Kennedy family," explained playwright Kathrine Bates by telephone from her home in southern California recently. "I came up with the idea of having an older Rose prepping for a television interview and revisiting her past through the eyes of youth and middle age with three different actresses playing her. The older Rose is coming to terms with her life. The middle Rose deals more straightforwardly with the many difficulties she has faced, and the younger Rose is the wide-eyed optimist. Older Rose has a tendency to soften her memories, including those of her marriage to Joseph P. Kennedy. Middle Rose challenges Older Rose to see the marriage for what it really was, not the greatest romantic coupling of all time."

Elliot Norton Award winner Karen MacDonald, a former American Repertory Theater (A.R.T.) company member who plays Middle Rose, respects her character's candor.

"The way the play is written and structured, it is almost like Mrs. Kennedy is having a conversation with herself," said MacDonald by telephone recently. "The most interesting thing for me is that at this stage of her life, Mrs. Kennedy is expressing her opinions a bit more freely. Middle Rose is the one of the three who pipes up most with comments. Historically, Mrs. Kennedy was known to be very private. Here, however, she says things you might not expect."

She also addresses topics often only gossiped about, including the personal life of her fourth child and second daughter, Kathleen Kennedy, who died at age 28 in a 1948 airplane crash over France in which her rumored paramour, the not-yet-divorced Peter Wentworth-Fitzwilliam, also perished. At the time of her death, Kathleen Kennedy Cavendish was Marchioness of Hartington, the widow of William Cavendish, the Marquess of Hartington, who was killed in action in World War II four years earlier. Kathleen Kennedy's mother attended neither her wedding nor her funeral.

"The play makes the point that it was Mrs. Kennedy's faith that kept her strong," according to MacDonald. "It is this part of her life that a lot of people like to theorize about, especially because she was dealt so many hard blows. Middle Rose believes she did the right thing by not speaking to her daughter Kathleen again after she married a Protestant."

MacDonald – whose post-A.R.T. credits include a haunting portrayal of the mother in last season's Huntington Theatre Company production of Arthur Miller s "All My Sons" – knew that playing the Kennedy matriarch would be a challenge.

"When you play a role like this, you want to make sure you're honoring the spirit of the person. What's harder in playing real-life people is that audiences come with certain expectations. They have to let go and trust the actors to be true to the spirit of the characters."

Bates was careful to try and capture that spirit – not to mention that one-of-a-kind Kennedy accent – in her text.

"I tried very much to hear Rose's voice in my head as I wrote," says Bates, who was asked to write her latest play by producer Chuck Fries, who had admired her earlier play, "The Manor," about a prominent Beverly Hills family in the 1920s. "The dialogue reflects not just Boston, but also the Kennedy-esque style that is so familiar."

Being born in South Boston and brought up in Milton has given Watertown resident MacDonald – the current Rev. Donald J. Monan, S.J., Professor in Theatre Arts at Boston College who will be seen this spring in SpeakEasy Stage's "The Drowsy Chaperone" at the Boston Center for the Arts – her own brand of Boston accent, but she says she plans to use more than just her speaking voice to capture Kennedy.

"The playwright's intention is more to explore the character's interior. Her direction is that the actresses need not look just like Rose Kennedy," says MacDonald. "The playwright is more interested in actresses who resemble each other. Theresa Masse, an Emerson student who plays Young Rose, Judith Roberts who is Older Rose, and I worked with our director, Melia Bensussen, to decide what we should each sound like and also how we could best evoke Mrs. Kennedy and each other. The three of us are each other's lifelines in this piece. I just hope that people devoted to Mrs. Kennedy will come with open hearts and minds."

ArtsEmerson will open its Irish Festival with "The Color of Rose," at the Paramount Center's Black Box, 560 Washington St., Boston, Jan. 27-Feb. 6. For tickets and information, visit the box office, call 617-824-8000 or go online at artsemerson.org.

Sliding into a musical career

ATLANTIC OVERTURES

RONALD G. VIGUE

ATLANTIC SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Leave it to the Atlantic Symphony Orchestra's Jan. 30 "Discovery Concert" at Braintree's Thayer Academy, our annual way of introducing South Shore school kids to classical music, to take me back to my own personal time of musical discovery.

So there I was, in the fourth grade, being handed a musical instrument, made of brass with a long slide. It looked pretty and complicated or perhaps pretty complicated? At that time, I wasn't sure which. For sure, it wasn't the one I wanted to play. I wanted the alto saxophone. Perhaps the single most coolest instrument in the world.

If I remember correctly, my decision to pursue the saxophone had nothing to do with anything musical, but more with how it could help me impress (and pursue) the fourth-grade girls in my elementary school. Maybe even the fifth-grade girls with any luck! Unfortunately, Mr. Albright, my teacher, had other ideas. He was trying to get me to change to the trombone.

Many of my boy classmates had been thinking in the same way I was about the saxophone, and the school band already had way too many. So alas there I was again. Always being the last to pick, with my family name beginning with "V," and staring at an instrument that metaphorically could be described as the "elephant" in the room. Particularly with that slide. that darn slide.

In a strange way, though, that slide was the only reason Mr. Albright's persuasion worked at all. It was, in a way, mesmerizing. And as I began to improvise with the instrument, suddenly the trombone seemed not so bad. Mr. Albright showed me how to buzz my lips and make a sound, something I was able to do right away. "A natural!" he mentioned.

But still, I hesitated. To me it sounded kind of flat or at the very least sharp, I thought sarcastically, as my chances in becoming the next great saxophonist slipped away. John Coltrane, Dexter Gordon, and Ronald Vigue! It had all sounded so right to me. But the more I played the trombone, the more my thoughts about the woodwinds went away. So after deliberating for a few tense moments, the die was cast: I would be an official member of the low brass. J.J. Johnson here I come! (And, it turned out, it did make my supportive parents happy, as the cost of the Yamaha trombone I chose was much less than that of a Selmer saxophone.)

What I did not realize at the age of 8, though, was that it didn't matter what instrument I chose. What mattered was that I was beginning my musical existence. I was entering into a world that would enhance my life in immeasurable ways. Being present with music at any level not just performing, but even by listening, as our young audience will be doing on Jan. 30 at Thayer changes your perspective for the better. For the much better!

As a fourth-grader, I would never have guessed that I was in for the years of musical experiences that I have had thus far. From being a performer myself, to leading musical organizations, I have been blessed with unique opportunities for experiencing the power of music in a very intimate way. I have been close to fine music-making all my life, as a listener, and as a composer and administrator. The extraordinary impact of those experiences on my view of the world is insurmountable.

All because of that darn slide.

Ronald G. Vigue, executive director of the Atlantic Symphony Orchestra, is also an award-winning composer, having been honored by the American Music Center, the Pew Charitable Trusts, and the Theodore Presser Foundation, among others, for his work. He currently is writing his first opera with Obie-winning playwright Albert Innaurato for Center City Opera Theater in Philadelphia.

Drum program a hit at middle school

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

A walk through the halls of the middle high school last Wednesday might have got some people thinking they were transported to an African village. And, in part, they might be right.

Sixth graders at the middle school were introduced to the rich tradition of percussion in Africa through a special collaboration between the school and the South Shore Art Center.

The percussion lesson, where everyone got to keep a beat on a variety of percussion instruments, was just one of several programs to complement the sixth graders curriculum unit on Africa.

With the financial support of the Cohasset Rotary, the South Shore Art Center is bringing the culture of Africa — in particular, music and art — to the students as they study geography and social issues of the continent in their social studies classrooms. The collaboration in Cohasset Middle School is similar to a program done with Scituate middle school students last year and again this year.

"This program has been one of our biggest successes," said Heather Collins, director of community outreach programs at the Art Center.

The program kicked off shortly after the students returned from winter vacation with a presentation from one of Cohasset's own graduates, Frannie Noble, who is now working with a group of orphanages in Kenya to bring a better quality of life to children.

"Not only did she bring beautiful visuals and an understanding of what life is like in Africa, but also the stu-

8th-grade athletes

Should they 'play up?'

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The policy for eighth graders "playing up" has a long history.

The process began in 2007 athletic Director Ron Ford was asked by the school committee to develop a policy and study the issue.

Over the course of several meetings the policy was discussed and debated. Some of the school committee members expressed concerns about the impact eighth-grade involvement might have on high school participation, the increased possibility of cuts, and the socialization aspect of putting eighth graders with seniors.

The policy that was ultimately voted on allowed eighth graders to participate at the lowest level of a sport available (junior varsity or, if there is not a JV team, then varsity) if the school was unable to field a team solely with high school students.

Auditor presents draft report to town officials, residents

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

It's been months in the making.

Rumors have been circulating like wildfire.

Questions have gone unanswered and feathers have been ruffled along the way.

But, on Tuesday night, the independent auditor, who the town hired to examine both the water and sewer departments, came forward with his draft report.

The result is a starting point, rather than an ending point, as the town must now move forward to address the issues auditor John Sullivan of Melanson Heath & Company uncovered.

The room was packed with about 30 people eager to hear the findings of the audit. Many of the attendees were town officials, but there was also a good amount of interested citizenry. Town officials made a point to unveil the auditor's report at a single time, so town officials and residents were receiving the same information on Tuesday night.

Read report online

The auditor's complete draft report on both the water and sewer departments and PowerPoint presentation from Tuesday evening is available on the Town of Cohasset website, www.townofcohasset.org.

The complete audit report is now available on the town's website, www.townofcohasset.org.

Sullivan offered up his findings, the consequences and recommendations on how to move forward. Discussions on how to address the issues he raises, including a $265,000 current year deficit and oversight issues will be the topic of many meetings over the next few weeks.

During the course of the auditor's work, they detected errors and other actions that impact the financial position of the water department, and by extension, the town. Although the water department operates as an enterprise fund, it is ultimately the responsibility of the town to ensure it is solvent. Very few issues were found in the audit of the sewer department.

The bottom line number is not as drastic as the worst-case scenario outlined in early December where the auditor said as much as $1 million could have been incorrectly classified in the water department budgets. Sullivan said he believed operational expenses were incorrectly classified as capital expenses and vice-a-versa. While some of that did occur, according to his findings, it was not as drastic as initially reported.

Yet, the town still needs to grapple with a $265,967 current year deficit.

"That is going to have to be dealt with," Sullivan said. "Fortunately it is not a million dollars."

The auditor also uncovered several accounting errors that were in violation

Winter update for DPW

Cohasset DPW reminds residents that a sand and salt mixture is available in the upper corner of the town parking lot.

When snow is forecast, residents are asked to not park on streets plowed by the town to expedite snow removal. Vehicles that obstruct snow removal operations will be towed at the owners expense. Residents and contractors are reminded not to move snow, ice or water onto roadways that may impede traffic.

The town is not responsible for damage to mailboxes, driveway aprons, walkways, stone walls, grassed areas, shrubs, trees or fences that fall within the town layout.

Devin Tulio, left, 7, and her twin brother Jonathan, right, scream as they speed down the hill in front of the Middle-High School after the snowstorm last Friday (Jan. 21). This week's Wednesday-Thursday storm left tons more of the white stuff all over the region.

S'no more!

Cohasset snow budget blown for season

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Enough already.

That's the sentiment being heard all over town as Cohasset was digging out once again from a major snowstorm on Thursday morning.

Cohasset and the South Shore have been slammed by four snowstorms over the past month, including the one this week that dumped close to a foot in town.

Schoolchildren celebrated their third snow day of the year on Thursday morning but, on the flip side, the more snow days means the later kids and teachers will have to go to school in June. Businesses and town hall were open as usual.

What constitutes a winter wonderland to some is a major challenge to others, including those who are weary of shoveling long driveways and walks, and the DPW as it goes about plowing 40 miles of accepted roads in town and over 11 miles of private ways. The DPW has the great responsibility of keeping the roads clear and safe for passage for emergency vehicles and residents.

According to Mary Snow of the DPW, the town's snow removal equipment headed out to the streets around 10p.m. on Wednesday evening. Hired contractors were called in to aid in the process around 1:30a.m.

This week's overnight storm fell fast and furious. Very little snowfall had accumulated before midnight, but in the early morning hours the inches accumulated fast. Cohasset woke up to close to 10 inches.

The Superintendent of Schools confers with DPW supervisor Carl Sestito before calling off school.

At around 10a.m. on Thursday the trucks were finishing up plowing and intended to hit the streets with sand.

This storm likely put Cohasset's snow removal budget well into deficit.

Town Meeting allocated $125,000 to the snow and ice budget last spring. The budget allocation has slowly increased over the past few years to more closely reflect the typical costs. Before this week's storm the DPW had used up all of the snow funding, Snow said. That means the clean-up of this week's storm and for all future storms will put the line item further into deficit. The town's snow and ice line item is one of the only a few town budget line items that can run a deficit.

The repeated snowstorms have all New Englanders asking when will it end? February, which typically packs a couple of storms, begins next week. But, only Mother Nature knows what's in store.

Police Beat

Out-of-towner slides onto lawn

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The rental car had to be towed, police said. The driver was unfamiliar with the area.

At 8:10 a.m. on Sunday (Jan. 23), police responded to a call about an accident at Summer Street and Blackhorse Lane. The caller reported that a silver Kia Forte 4-door had driven across his lawn, through a bush and into a neighbor's yard the night before. Investigation revealed the driver, a 46-year-old man from Colleyville, Texas, who, police said, was staying at the Harbor Inn, thought Summer Street went to the right at that intersection and slid onto the lawn and through the bushes. The rental car had to be towed, police said. The driver was unfamiliar with the area.

Default warrant

At 9:26 a.m. on Tuesday (Jan. 18), Cohasset police officers were called to the area of Brewster road and Ledgewood Farm Drive on a report from a concerned caller that a woman in black leather boots, dark pants and a gray hooded sweatshirt appeared confused. Upon arrival, police recognized the 45-year-old Quincy woman as someone that they had dealt with before. She apparently knows someone in the neighborhood, police said. They ran her information in the computer that revealed she was wanted on a default warrant out of Quincy District Court for motor vehicle offenses and she was placed under arrest.

Bad corner

At 10:14 a.m. on Tuesday (Jan. 18) an off-duty officer came across a motor vehicle accident at Windy Hill Road and Jerusalem Road. Police said a 23-year-old Cohasset man in a 2005 Jeep Wrangler had come to the bad corner there that freezes up and slid off the road into a tree. The Jeep had to be towed; there were no injuries.

House egged

A Border Street resident asked for extra patrols last week after her house was egged. She called police at 2:58 p.m. on Tuesday (Jan. 18) to report the incident.

Sledding

Police investigated reported vandalism at the Swim Center last week that was likely due to people sledding down the hill at the Swim Center. About eight ground lights had been knocked out valued at about $400, police said. Police said the damage was not malicious in nature. The lights would likely not be replaced until the spring.

Fight investigated

At about 11:53 p.m. on Thursday (Jan. 20), a Cohasset officer stopped a Nissan Stanza on South Main Street whose occupants had been reportedly involved in a fight at Jamie's Pub in North Scituate. The Cohasset officer stopped the car near Summer Street. The passenger, a 21-year-old man, and the driver, a 21-year-old woman, were both from Scituate. The officer held the car for Scituate Police who brought the couple back to Jamie's where the altercation was investigated.

Identity theft

A 45-year-old Cohasset man reported to police last Friday that he had received a $2500 bill in the mail from National Grid gas for an apartment building in Roxbury. Police said someone had used the Cohasset man's social security number to obtain utilities at the Roxbury address. The Cohasset man had no connection with the Roxbury address, police said.

No-trespass order

A Cohasset store on Chief Justice Cushing Highway (Route 3A) is sending a no-trespass order to a 53-year-old Quincy woman who became disruptive in a dispute over the price of an item and initially refused to leave on Saturday (Jan. 22), police said. The store was able to provide the plate number of the 2006 BMW that the woman was driving and police were able to obtain her identity and address.

'Stolen' plate

A walk-in to the Police Station last Wednesday turned in a license plate that he had found. Police said a check on the plate number revealed the plate had been "stolen" out of Quincy. Police believe the plate likely fell off a car and the owner reported it stolen, so a new one could be issued. Cohasset notified Quincy Police to cancel the stolen plate computer entry.

Gas pumps

A caller from the Mobil Mart reported a suspicious man asking about the gas pumps but the man had left by the time police arrived. The call came in at 3:42 p.m. on Thursday (Jan. 20).

Auditor presents draft report to town officials, residents of Massachusetts General Laws, which need to be corrected.

The audit report found much of the financial crisis that came to a head last spring could largely be attributed to the enormous amount — close to $33 million — of capital authorizations by Town Meeting in a short amount of time, the spending of that money in a short amount of time and an inadequate system to meet the needs of such a complex and ambitious program.

"The imposition of such a large capital program during a short period of time overwhelmed virtually every aspect of the resources available to the town to manage and control financial management of the operating and capital operations of the water department," the report states.

While the construction project had five devoted employees, the staffing levels at the water department (three part-time commissioners) and staffing in the town's finance department remained the same.

"The report shows that pressures to stabilize the water rates resulted in taking steps to balance budgets and avoid deficits which only deferred and compounded the rate problems until in 2010, there was no way to contain the crisis," the report states. The issues were exacerbated by a wet summer and decreased water consumption.

Unaccounted for water

One of the issues plaguing the water department is the amount of unaccounted for water, that is, in other words, water that is leaving the plant, but does not ultimately get billed back to a customer. Sullivan said over the past few years the average percentage of unaccounted for water is about 40 percent.

Over the past few years the water department has made efforts to combat this issue and some system leaks have been found, particularly during the Little Harbor water work, but not enough to make a significant dent in the percentage of unaccounted for water.

"The water loss seems constant as a percentage loss in months of low consumption is more than in months with high consumption," Sullivan said. He's not sure what that could mean, but he said it's a clue to look further into.

Sullivan said a 2009 audit was done that looked particularly into the billing system. They came to the same conclusion as Sullivan in that the customers known to the department are in the system and are getting billed.

The unaccounted for water figure is important because it raises the cost of water delivery for every customer. Because water is being lost in the system, more water has to be cleaned, processed and pumped into the system to meet the needs of users. With more water, but a smaller base of users, the cost of water goes up.

Sullivan said all water systems have some percentage of unaccounted for water, but typically that number hovers in the 15 percent range.

"It's a major issue," Sullivan said.

Moving forward

Sullivan made several recommendations on how to move forward and to correct the oversight and control issues plaguing the water department in particular.

The current governance structure is co-management between the two independently election commissions and the town manager. Although the amount of capital activity for both departments is on the wane, Sullivan said the co-management of the department was a "recipe for a disaster." If the parties do not get along or agree, the departments could be brought to a standstill, he said.

He recommended replacing the currently separately elected water and sewer commission, each with three-members, with one five-member water and sewer board appointed by the Board of Selectmen.

"The board would be advisory in nature and provide recommendations and capital planning functions for the Town Manager," Sullivan said in the report.

In conjunction with the five-member water and sewer board, Sullivan highly recommended the creation of a water and sewer superintendent position. He said it would be necessary to manage a professional staff capable of developing and implementing the control systems required to run the departments efficiently.

Further, he suggested the town consider hiring a town engineer, additional support staff, and a designate a water and sewer business manager (likely, the finance director).

The report also includes five utility models that currently exist in Massachusetts towns, some locally and some not so locally.

A member of the sewer commission, Wayne Sawchuk, expressed disagreement with a combination water and sewer board, as he said the sewer commission is not facing the same magnitude of issues as the water department.

Advisory Committee chair Sam Wakeman stopped a potential debate before it started.

"That is a discussion that is in the future and not tonight," Wakeman said.

In fact, largely all the questions asked at the meeting were put off to another night to give everyone a chance to read the full draft report.

"The issue is now what do we do with this and how do we correct all the problems," Wakeman said at the close of the meeting.

The auditor's explanation:

Why is my water bill so high?

In recent years, the Town has authorized over $33 million in water debt. The debt service requirements – alone – in the Water Department now amounts to around $1,200 annually per metered customer. That does not include water operations, sewer betterment charges, or sewer operating fees and charges. In addition to the debt being passed through to the customers, the aggressive construction projects increased the cost to operate the water system due to new wells, pumping stations, processes and other operating costs. In 2005, the cost of the Contract Operator was $725,220, including chemicals and utility costs. In 2010, the same Contract Operations costs $1,027,167, not including utility costs of $87,000 or chemicals of $158,000 for a total cost of $ 1,272,167. That represents an increase of 75 percent. Even though there have been some credits for vacant positions, the combination of higher debt and operating costs have resulted in substantial cost increases in a short period of time.

The problem is compounded by the fact that 40 percent of the water being produced and pumped into the distribution system is being lost. As a result, the metered customers are paying much more for the cost to produce water than they are using. The water loss problems have been long standing, and despite attempts to detect and correct the problem and substantial improvements to the treatment plant and distribution system, the problem persists.

Examining policy for 8th-grade athletes

"Eighth graders are asked to participate on an as needed basis," Ford said.

Although Ford said the policy has worked successfully over the past few years the issue was up for discussion once again at the January 19 school committee meeting. Some members of the community wanted to re-visit the policy.

"The MIAA allows schools like ours to bring eighth graders up, but it's a committee decision."

— Ron Ford, Athletic Director

The MIAA, the organization that governs high school athletics in the state, allows middle school students to participate in varsity athletics, if the middle school is under the same principal as the high school.

"There's some feeling (in the community) that eighth graders should be able to play at the varsity level (if their talent merits it). The MIAA allows schools like ours to bring eighth graders up, but it's a committee decision," Ford said.

Ford said the currently in place policy has worked successfully over the past few years and helped fill out rosters of several sports teams, including this fall's boys and girls junior varsity soccer teams, wrestling squad, swim team and girls' junior varsity basketball.

If the policy was changed to allow eighth-grade participation across all sports, Ford said it might impact the amount of cuts that need to be made or increase the need for freshman teams.

This particular policy has been re-visited several times over the course of the past few years.

In September 2009, the school committee revisited the eighth-grade athletic participation policy after a member raised concerns about the middle school participants being exposed to more mature discussion between the high school students.

One of the students directly impacted by the policy is current senior Carly Haggerty. She said she tried out for the girls' basketball team as an eighth grader and made the varsity squad. She played one game as a varsity player before she was told she only could play at the junior varsity level due to the policy.

"But, I still practiced with varsity and we went on the same buses and they were my mentors," Carly said.

Girls' basketball coach John LeVangie said he believed players should play where their talent dictates.

"To deny access (to play on a varsity team) to a talented student who could play at that level is wrong," LeVangie said. He implored the school committee to adopt the MIAA policy because it didn't have exceptions.

The majority of the school committee said they would take review of the policy under advisement.

School committee member Linda Snowdale suggested the policy revert to the MIAA policy until the committee could review the current policy.

But, middle high school principal Joel Antolini said that type of change would be controversial.

"There would be a lot of parents and faculty very upset," Antolini said. In particular, he said they are concerned high school students being displaced from sports teams in favor of talented eighth graders.

School committee member Paul Schubert cautioned against a hasty change in the policy as well, "we have to understand parents and children will be affected by any change to the policy."

SNOW DAY

Athletics eyed in budget discussion

School committee grapples with potential cuts

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

As the School Committee inches closer to a budget number for fiscal 2012 several tough discussions need to talk place. The current draft school budget requests a $700,000 or a 4.64 percent increase over the current year's budget. Much of that number is attributed to the loss of several grants and other offsets.

At this time it's unlikely the town will be able to support that large of an increase, which means the school will need to make cuts or find other sources of revenue. The school committee is planning several budget sub-committee meetings to discuss the possibilities.

One of the areas that will be scrutinized is athletics. A budget sub-committee planned to meet on Wednesday this week, but the meeting was postponed due to the snowstorm. The sub-committee had invited many of the stakeholders in the athletic program, the booster club leaders, the sports partnership and interested parents.

"We need to have the discussion with the boosters," said Alfred Slanetz, school committee vice chair, at last week's regular school committee meeting. He also said the committee should discuss the options for teaching delivery, specifically modifying the block schedule. "Those are the two levers (that would lead a significant savings)."

Slanetz encouraged athletic director Ron Ford and the boosters to come to the meeting with "creative ideas."

"I don't want us to be stuck in the position where the only lever we have is to raise (athletic) fees," Slanetz said.

Other school districts have incorporated advertisements on to their playing fields or called on the boosters to step in to cover more of the athletic budget, Ford said.

During the 2006-2007 school year, Ford said in a phone interview, boosters clubs supplement junior varsity costs over and above the athletic user fees. The donations ended up totaling close to $13,000. The costs were re-incorporated into the budget the following year, Ford said.

The current draft budget for the athletics is $224,286 (not including offsets of gate receipts and user fees). This number is a 45 percent increase over the current year because the schools used all its reserves built up over the past few years from its athletic revolving fund this year. A total of $70,000 from the athletic revolving fund was used in the fiscal 2011 budget.

School committee member Jeanne Astino asked Ford to prepare the costs associated with each sport.

Business manager Dave DeGennaro and school committee chair Helene Lieb are looking into possibilities for energy and recycling. Several school districts in Massachusetts, including Milton, have gotten solar arrays at little cost to the district and then reaped significant savings on energy costs.

"Our financial situation is pressing and it's just a good thing to do in Cohasset," Lieb said.

A budget sub-committee meeting geared toward looking at the athletic budget will be re-scheduled in the coming weeks. As of press time, the new date and time was unclear.

Familiar face to X-Files fans

Santoro is basis for comic book character

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The road to get Santoro in to the pages of a comic one is an interesting one and it begins with his son, Matt.

Charlie Santoro of Cohasset is a cop in real life.

For 27 years he has served in the Quincy Police Department, currently he holds the rank of lieutenant.

Last year Santoro got the chance to be a police officer in Alaska and work with FBI agents Mulder and Scully on a series of mysterious murders — if only as a cartoon character.

Santoro's name and likeness appears in the "X-Files 30 Days of Night" comic series. The six-book DC comic series puts the famed X-Files characters in Alaska investigating a strange murder during Alaska's dark season.

The road to get Santoro in to the pages of a comic one is an interesting one and it begins with his son, Matt. Matt works in Los Angeles primarily as a visual effects artist. He's been a part of several major movies including "X-Men Origins: Wolverine," "The Incredible Hulk," "Alien vs. Predator" and "Rise of the Silver Surfer."

But, his father said, Matt got his start making music videos and one of the groups he worked with repeatedly was Tool, a heavy metal band.

Somewhere along the line, Santoro became friendly with the Tool guitarist Adam Jones.

"We're both artists so we started talking about that," Santoro said. Santoro is a painter and Jones has several creative outlets outside of music. The friendship blossomed from there.

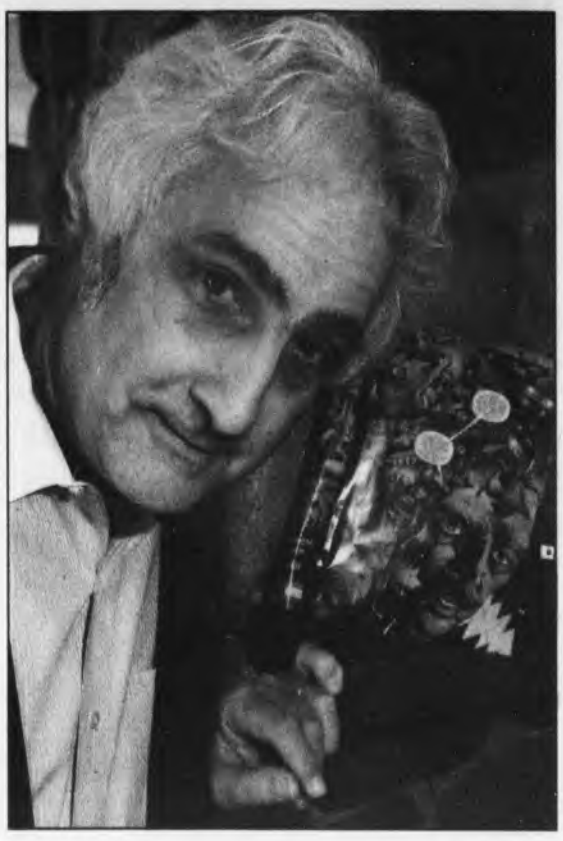
Jones teamed up with Steve Niles to write the X-Files comic book series. Unbeknownst to Santoro they found him a role.

Santoro had flown down to Houston to see Tool live in concert on Father's Day weekend last year.

"Here I was at 57 years old at a heavy metal concert, but I actually really enjoyed it," Santoro said. "Then (after the show) they told me they were putting me in a comic book – and sure enough they did. I thought it was hysterical."

Santoro picked up multiple copies of the comic books as they were released. Framed pages of the comic book where "Officer Santoro" is featured are hung in his Linden Circle home. Several of the comic books' pages were pinned up around the Quincy police station where he works.

"It's incredible. I've been to two heavy metal concerts and I'm the kind of guy who listens to Jewel!" Santoro said.



Santoro also appears in the trailer of his son Matt's new in production movie "Offline."

Now that all six issues in the comic series have been published, Santoro discovered his comic book fate.

"Unfortunately they kill me off in the end," Santoro said with a laugh.

But if there is a follow-up he's hopeful they'll bring him back to life.

"Apparently that's what they do in comics!"

GIMME SHELTER

Carlita has the most beautiful topaz colored eyes and should make a great companion.

Carlita is just about purr-fect

This week Hull Seaside Animal Rescue would like to find shelter for Carlita. Carlita is a 7-month-old short hair, buff colored Tabby. She came to us along with her brother, Carlos. Carlita, unlike Carlos, has learned to trust humans, and will allow us to pet her and pick her up. She purrs loudly and should do well in a home setting. She's completely non-aggressive. We were hoping for these two to be adopted together, but don't want to deprive Carlita of a home while waiting for Carlos to come around. She has the most beautiful topaz colored eyes and should make a great companion. She should thrive in a home setting. You can check her out on our website, www.hsar.org, or visit her during our open hours from 2 to 3 p.m., on Saturdays, or 6:30 to 7:30 p.m., on Mondays. If you prefer to make an appointment, call Shirl at 781-925-3380.

Carlita purrs loudly and should do well in a home setting. She's completely non-aggressive.

We're located at 50 L Street, Hull. Mailing address is Hull Seaside Animal Rescue, P.O. Box 787, Hull, MA, 02045; email hsar@verizon.net.

We offer a monthly spay/neuter clinic. Thursday, Feb. 10, is this month's date. For more information, check it out on the website www.hsar.org or call Mary at 781-925-3121 to schedule an appointment.

Thanks to all who have graciously donated to our shelter, including the volunteers and the wonderful people who have given our felines "forever homes."

We have many volunteer opportunities including help with fundraising and/or grant writing. If you'd like to join us in our efforts, please call Nancy at 781-925-3638.

UPDATE

Recycling Transfer Facility employees (from left) Herb Brown, Charlie Guarente, Chuck Baker and Phil Edgett all signed the pledge and got their bracelets last week.

Pledges are growing in number

What is it: A community group, the Cohasset Coalition for a Caring Community (CCforCC), is seeking signatures for a pledge to be kinder and promote respect for differences. It's a community-wide effort to raise the consciousness of the community for bullying at all levels and in a variety of situations.

Who is a part of it: The Cohasset Coalition for a Caring Community has been meeting on a monthly basis since April. Participants represent a cross-section of the community: school administration, teachers, police officers, clergy, and parents. But, everyone in the community – residents, people who work here, people who visit here – are all invited to join in and sign the pledge.

Where to sign the pledge: The pledge is available at four locations: Town Hall Recreation Department, Dependable Cleaners in the village, Good Sport on Route 3A, and the South Shore Community Center. A "Skipper blue" bracelet is given out with every signed pledge.

When: Signed pledges will be collected through the beginning of February.

Number of pledges signed so far: More than 2,000.

Signed pledges goal: 3,000.

What does the pledge say: "I pledge to promote respect for human differences and the basic rights and dignity of all, and to avoid behavior that is hurtful to others."

Who has signed: Schools and churches have done their pledging. There has been pledge station at various events around town over the past few weeks from basketball games to the Martin Luther King breakfast to events at the schools. The Board of Selectmen and the School Committee signed the pledge at their meetings.

According to Trish Morse, coalition member and parent, the coalition will be focused on getting pledges from the business community, stores, doctors' offices, banks, etc. in the next week.

Why is it important: "The whole community is working to create a culture and climate that foster kindness and respect. The coalition has led the charge in bringing the community together to continue to address issues to reduce risk and increase resiliency," said Dr. Barbara Green, a member of the coalition.

Baked goods wanted for Valentine's Day at pantry

The Cohasset Food Pantry is looking for a few good bakers. They would love to provide baked goodies to their clients for Valentine's Day. Co-director of the food pantry Jane Corry said goodies could be bought or baked. She is hopeful several individuals and/or groups will come forward to help.

"It would be great if kids would help by making valentines to go with the baked goods," Corry said. Cookies or brownies are ideal.

Items may be left at the Food Pantry (located in the rear of the St. Anthony's rectory on South Main St.) on Monday, Feb. 7 and 14 from 8:30 to 11a.m. and Tuesday, Feb. 8 and 15 from 8 to 9a.m.

Baked goods may also be left at Saint Anthony Parish center from 9a.m. to 3p.m., the week of February 7.

Corry is happy to speak with anyone interested in helping. She can be reached at the food pantry at 781-383-0219, ext. 25, or 781-383-6718, or by e-mail at coryjm@gmail.com).

The pantry has come a long way in filling their shelves over the past few months – thanks to the generosity of the community. Yet, there is a constant need, especially for certain items, see list: Peanut butter, jams and jellies, mayonnaise, Ketchup, corned beef hash, beef stew, pancake mix, maple syrup, Tylenol and Advil, deodorant, dish and laundry detergent, sponges, cleaning products, and kid-sized snacks and juice cartons.

The Cohasset Food Pantry does not accept expired or already opened food.

Donations can be dropped off at the rear entrance of St. Anthony's Rectory on South Main St. from 8:30 to 9:30a.m. on Tuesdays, at Stop & Shop, or at local churches on Sundays. To give a monetary donation, the food pantry mailing address is Cohasset Food Pantry, P.O. Box 297, Cohasset, MA 02025.

The joy of singing

CONSERVATORY NOTES

EMILY BROWDER MELVILLE

Emily Browder Melville has been teaching with South Shore Conservatory since 2008.

One of my most treasured gifts from my mother is a cut-out and framed cartoon from The New Yorker. In it, a little bird on a branch informs a curious ornithologist: "I don't sing because I'm happy. I'm happy because I sing!" I have carried this cartoon with me from apartment to apartment — from home to home — for many years, and with each passing season I appreciate its wisdom even more. Singing never fails to lift my spirits. It energizes me. If I'm feeling tired, sad, or frustrated, it's like an elixir that lightens my burden. The extra oxygen perks me up. A melancholy tune matches my mood and then — as if by magic — I am a little more awake, a little more patient, a little happier.

My mission as a voice teacher has been to help students find that lift through singing. My method is pretty simple: listen for what is beautiful in each voice, establish vocal habits that make singing feel easy, and enjoy how the music carries us where we need to go.

Learning to sing is a wonderful vehicle for self-discovery, self-expression, and self-care. I have a private adult student who says that singing is her favorite way of blowing off steam. One of my teenage students laughs with pleasure each time she finds a really resonant sound. Parents in our family music program, Music Together, are amazed to discover that they, too, can create simple, lovely harmonies with other grown-ups in class.

Singing is also a powerful way to connect with others, and for many people, particularly elementary aged children, a group voice class is a wonderful opportunity to learn the basics of voice while making friends and developing fundamental musical skills such as note-reading and counting. For young singers who are timid about singing solo, singing in a group is a less intimidating way to perform as well.

Learning to sing is a wonderful vehicle for self-discovery, self-expression, and self-care.

Much of the recorded music young children sing along with is sung by adults with fully formed singing mechanisms. Imitating a mature sound can lead to serious problems down the road for young singers. The Conservatory's Voice Department offers developmentally appropriate group instruction for young singers whose lungs and vocal muscles are still growing. Young voices are generally ready for private instruction by age 13.

Each day is a fresh chance to sing. Like the wise bird in the cartoon, we don't have to be happy to sing. We just have to start singing and see what happens.

South Shore Conservatory starts its spring semester of voice classes the week of Jan. 31. Classes offered include Primo Voice Class for children ages 6 to 9, Mezzo Voice Class for singers ages 10 to 13, and Come to the Cabaret for adults hoping to expand their repertoire, improve their technique and polish their performance skills. For more information visit www.sscmusic.org or call 781-749-7565, ext. 11.

Emily Browder Melville has been teaching with South Shore Conservatory since 2008. This summer she taught singers in Summer Vocal Institute's SVI Primo, ages 6 to 9, and SVI Mezzo, 10 to 13 levels.

Jeff Perry, former state representative and candidate for US Congress, is now a Special Sheriff in Barnstable County.

Perry lands job in Barnstable County Sheriff's Department

By John Basile
JBASILE@CNC.COM

Former Republican State Rep. Jeffrey Perry, R-Sandwich, was not out of a job for long after losing his bid for Congress.

Perry was defeated in November for the 10th Congressional District seat by Democrat William Keating, the former Norfolk County District Attorney.

Perry, 46, is at work in the office of Barnstable County Sheriff James Cummings, a longtime political ally, as Special Sheriff, the second in command at the department.

Perry will be paid $110,000 a year to, in Cummings' words, "be in charge if for any reason the sheriff is out of the office."

Cummings said the appointment is based on Perry's years as a police officer and his knowledge of the working of the Legislature, where he spent eight years. Perry is also a lawyer.

Cummings acknowledged Perry's controversial past as a sergeant in the Wareham Police Department.

"That's why I hired a retired FBI agent to do a background check," Cummings said. The check involved asking whether Perry was involved in a police cover-up of his actions or, stood by and watched as a subordinate officer strip-searched a teenage girl. Cumming said he was satisfied that Perry was not guilty of any wrongdoing.

During his campaign for Congress, Perry continually deflected charges that he was negligent in his duties as a police sergeant.

Cummings said he intends to rely on Perry's knowledge of the Massachusetts legislature when a study of consolidating sheriff's department operations comes up.

"It's important to me to have someone who knows his way around the statehouse," Cummings said.

Perry and Cummings have political as well as professional ties.

"He has contributed to my campaigns and I have contributed to his," said Cummings, who was recently elected to his third six-year term without opposition.

Cummings reiterated his reliance on Perry's knowledge of police work and the law.

"You cannot overlook his qualifications, especially his years as a state representative," Cummings said.

Forum on Turkey Hill Turbine is Feb. 7

Steve Sloan and other representatives of The Trustees of Reservations will present their proposal to build a wind turbine on Turkey Hill at a forum titled, "Moving Toward Sustainability: The Turkey Hill Wind Turbine" at the Abbey Center on Feb. 7, at 7 p.m. As the proposed turbine site is located in Cohasset near the Hingham town line, the Abbey Center site at 16 Hull Street is an appropriate location for Cohasset and Hingham residents along Hull and East Streets to participate in TTOR's presentation addressing this project. REACH/Hingham, Responsible Energy Alternatives Coalition of Hingham, sponsor of this forum, has secured the February date for this meeting after several months of planning. In recent months at its open meetings, the Cohasset Planning Board has discussed TTOR's proposal and examined related engineering data at length. The Board has now closed its hearings as it begins deliberations on the TTOR application.

The Trustees are intent on reaching out to residents in the Route 228 corridor along East and Hull Streets close to the Route 3-A intersection.

During several public meetings the Trustees have reviewed their rationale for building the turbine, as well as questions about the turbine's visual and audible effects, the construction process, and its impact on the Turkey Hill conservation area. Such matters will be discussed at the scheduled meeting. The Trustees are intent on reaching out to residents in the Route 228 corridor along East and Hull Streets close to the Route 3-A intersection. This forum will afford these residents, as well as those others in the Hull-Hingham-Cohasset area, an additional opportunity to learn about the proposal's particulars and to share their interests, concerns, and experiences. Everyone is welcome.

As recently as Oct. 27, 2010, REACH/Hingham sponsored a well-attended forum on TTOR's proposal at the Hingham Public Library, one of the many alternative-energy forums REACH has presented for Hingham residents over the years. REACH, the sponsor of this forum at the Abbey Center, endorses TTOR's proposal.

Wind turbine deliberation postponed

On Wednesday morning, the planning board chair Al Moore decided to once again postpone the scheduled deliberation of the Turkey Hill wind turbine project due to a predicted snowstorm.

The anticipated public hearing on 100 Pond St. to seek a change to the residential cluster special permit is also proposed.

Planning Board administrator Jo-Ann Pilczak said town counsel and the planning board's consulting engineer, both people the planning board would like to have present during deliberation and the public hearing, have to travel a distance to get to (and from) the meeting.

On Tuesday, February 1 the turbine deliberation is scheduled for 7:45p.m. and 100 Pond St. public hearing is scheduled for 7:10p.m.

The planning board has closed the public hearings on the Trustees of Reservation's proposal for an 80-meter wind turbine on the Cohasset side of Turkey Hill.

On Tuesday, February 1 the turbine deliberation is scheduled for 7:45p.m. and 100 Pond St. public hearing is scheduled for 7:10p.m.

The Trustees of Reservations is a non-profit group dedicated to the preservation of open space. They maintain for the enjoyment of all over 100 properties across Massachusetts. Their local properties include World's End in Hingham, Whitney-Thayer Woods in Cohasset and Turkey Hill/Weir River Farm in Cohasset and Hingham.

Very little opposition to the project came from Cohasset residents – the nearest Cohasset residential building is Golden Living Center off Route 3A – but, there were widespread concerns expressed by Hingham residents, particularly in the Turkey Hill neighborhood.

Over the course of several public hearings items like noise, shadow flicker, visual impacts, ice throw/ice drop were discussed.

This is the second time the planning board has postponed the turbine deliberation due to a snowstorm. On January 12 the planning board met and continued the deliberation session until Wednesday, Jan. 26.

Student community service

"And so, my fellow Americans: ask not what your country can do for you — ask what you can do for your country."
- President John F. Kennedy, Jan. 20, 1961

Community service is nothing new. There have always been good kids doing good works whether the young person is striving for Eagle Scout or Gold Award status in scouting, filling a community service graduation requirement, or opting to serve in the Peace Corps.

But lately we have sensed something more in the air about our local students doing things that make a difference. Maybe they are just communicating with us more about their experiences.

But nevertheless, we think schools, churches, organizations (like Scouting) and families are doing an excellent job in getting the message across that young people should be involved in helping others and therefore, can help improve quality of life all around. These entities – and the students themselves – deserve accolades for their efforts.

Last week the Mariner featured Brenden Morrissey, who was one of 351 middle school students selected for the Governor's Project 351. Project 351 was part of Governor Deval Patrick's inaugural events to serve as a demonstration of the state's commitment to the next generation of learners and leaders. Eighth graders were asked to write an essay about volunteering and what they have done to give back to their communities.

Brenden volunteers every year for the Cohasset Triathlon because of its association with the Juvenile Diabetes Research Foundation and has volunteered at the Cohasset Youth Baseball and Softball Association's snack shack. With his local church he helped run a Halloween party for the youngest members and visited elderly in the community with cards and goodies. He also participated in a blood drive to benefit Crohn's disease research.

We also had an article in last week's edition about 16-year-old Alexander Carroll, who has written "Heaven's Music," a play with popular music with the proceeds for the upcoming performance to benefit the High Hopes Fund at Joslin Diabetes Center. Alexander crafted the play and began organizing this performance after he himself was diagnosed with Type I Diabetes. "I want to be part of a world that lives without Diabetes," he explains.

Last week, we also featured news about a special forum with special guests, Danielle and Taylor Frederick and Frannie Noble, where they planned to share their passion for global mission projects. The Frederick sisters are involved with the Global Orphan Project that is helping orphans around the world with a large focus on Haiti. Through various projects they were able to raise enough money to travel and bring along two suitcases each filled with 50 pounds of supplies for the children. They will be returning to Haiti in March to continue their work.

Frannie Noble works for Flying Kites Global, a humanitarian organization that believes in extraordinary care for orphaned and abandoned children. Based in Nairobi, Kenya Frannie helps run an orphanage outreach program called Oasis. Frannie, now 25, has traveled to Africa three times in the last five years. In college, she did volunteer work and an internship in Mali. In the summer of 2009 she spent three months in three different countries in Africa. She spent one month each volunteering in Ethiopia, Kenya and Tanzania.

There are countless other examples that include grade school and college students who are also pitching in to make our world a better place.

Many baby-boomers (now the parents and grandparents of today's schoolchildren) grew up hearing excerpts from then President John F. Kennedy's inaugural address that inspired a new generation at the time and continue to motivate us to this day.

The entire JFK quote from the speech is as follows:

"In the long history of the world, only a few generations have been granted the role of defending freedom in its hour of maximum danger. I do not shrink from this responsibility — I welcome it. I do not believe that any of us would exchange places with any other people or any other generation. The energy, the faith, the devotion which we bring to this endeavor will light our country and all who serve it — and the glow from that fire can truly light the world.

"And so, my fellow Americans: ask not what your country can do for you — ask what you can do for your country.

"My fellow citizens of the world: ask not what America will do for you, but what together we can do for the freedom of man."

Fifty years after President Kennedy said those words on the steps of the Capitol in Washington, D.C., doing something for others still makes us a better town, state and country.

We believe Community Service is a form of patriotism without fanfare but important, nonetheless. We think these small deeds – such as volunteerism by young people that are heartfelt — can help be the "glow from that fire that can truly light the world."

DEPARTMENT OF CORRECTIONS

The January 14 issue of the Mariner included an article "Future of Ripley Road condo project still undetermined," which contained incorrect information. The residence at 25 Ripley Road, the site of the proposed condominium project, was incorrectly called 2,200 square foot home. The building is 7,800 square feet.

Just can't seem to get interested in the water budget review these days

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Selectman Quigley's remarks faulted

TO THE EDITOR:

It was perplexing to read the remarks made by Selectman Quigley in the Mariner last week regarding her bid for re-election. Her comment that "the town deserves a selectman who makes independent decisions based on facts, not friends or politics" implies that her fellow selectmen make decisions for political gain or to reward friends. The responsibility of the chair of the selectmen is to elicit the widest possible understanding of a particular issue, and to respect the opposing views of fellow selectmen, but Ms. Quigley's remark infers a disregard or lack of understanding of those serving with her.

Many decisions that come before the selectmen have neither a right nor a wrong solution. There are facts to support both sides, and the challenge for the board is to weigh competing interpretations and to make decisions based on their best judgment as to what is fair and right. Selectman Quigley should proceed with nothing less than complete trust in the reasoning and intentions of her fellow selectmen and petitioners, and should understand that no position on a Cohasset board is deserving of a particular candidate.

HEALTH NOTES

Losing sleep as we get older

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Effective non-drug alternatives appear far more important in management of age-related insomnia.

Sleep that knits the raveled sleeve of care, from Macbeth, is, like most of the sayings about sleep, sometimes true, albeit, for short periods. Disorders like apnea, characterized by abnormal pauses in breathing or instances of abnormally low breathing during sleep, can last from a few seconds to minutes and may occur 5 to 30 times or more an hour.

Insomnia, not necessarily considered a disorder, may sometimes be alleviated with timed exposure to bright light, according to SS Campbell, et al, Department of Psychiatry, Cornell University. Such exposure at night appears to delay the release of a sleep-inducing hormone melatonin, according to the Journal of Clinical Endocrinology & Metabolism.

The study, which evaluated bright light exposure in the treatment of sleep maintenance insomnia, found half of the population over 65 suffer from chronic sleep disturbance.

As a consequence, almost 40 percent of hypnotic medications are prescribed to people over age 60. Yet, hypnotics are often of little benefit in this population. Effective non-drug alternatives appear far more important in management of age-related insomnia.

Following a baseline sleep and circadian rhythms assessment, subjects with sleep-maintenance insomnia were treated with timed exposure to either bright white light or dim red light for 12 consecutive days. Sleep and circadian rhythms recordings were subsequently obtained and measures of sleep quality were compared to assess efficacy of the treatments.

Setting: Baseline and post-treatment sleep and circadian rhythms assessments took place in the Laboratory of Human Chronobiology, Department of Psychiatry, Cornell University Medical College. The treatment phase of the study was conducted in participant's homes.

Participants: Sixteen men and women between the ages of 62 and 81 years were studied. All subjects were free of hypnotic medication, and all had experienced sleep disturbance for at least one year prior to entering the study.

Results: Exposure to bright light resulted in substantial changes in sleep quality. Waking time within sleep was reduced by an hour, and sleep efficiency improved from 77.5 percent to 90 percent, without altering time spent in bed. Increased sleep time was in the form of Stage 2 sleep, REM sleep, and slow wave sleep. The effects were remarkably consistent across subjects.

Conclusions: The findings demonstrate the effectiveness of timed exposure to bright light in the treatment of age-related sleep maintenance insomnia. With further refinement of treatment regimens, this non-drug intervention may prove useful in a large proportion of sleep-disturbed elderly.

Warning; Hypnotic or soporific drugs may induce sleep and are used in the treatment of insomnia and surgical anesthesia although patients rarely recover from anesthesia feeling refreshed. Because drugs in this class can produce unconsciousness, they are described as sedative-hypnotic drugs. Hypnotic drugs are regularly prescribed for insomnia and other sleep disorders, with over 95 percent of insomnia patients being prescribed hypnotics in some countries. Many hypnotic drugs are habit-forming and physicians may recommend sleep hygiene, and exercise as an alternative. Hypnotic medication when prescribed should be used for the shortest period of time possible.

Hypnotic medications also have side effects such as daytime fatigue, motor vehicle crashes, cognitive impairments, falls and fractures. In children, prescribing hypnotics is not generally acceptable unless if used to treat night terrors or somnambulism. Older people are more sensitive to side effects and the risks generally outweigh any marginal benefits of hypnotics in the elderly. Hypnotics generally cause unjustifiable risk to the individual and to public health, and lack evidence of long-term effectiveness. The risks include dependence, accidents, and other adverse effects. Gradual discontinuation of hypnotics leads to improved health without worsening of sleep. At best, they should be prescribed for only a few days at the lowest effective dose, and avoided altogether wherever possible in the elderly.

Alcohol is also considered a hypnotic drug, though not medically. To quote the British National Formulary: "Alcohol is a poor hypnotic because its diuretic action interferes with sleep during the latter part of the night. Alcohol also disturbs sleep patterns and so can worsen sleep disorders."

Extending the spirit of the holidays

THE ARTS

KATHRYN HILLMAN

The percussion sections' soli really stole the show, particularly with the rest of the band joining in, drumming on their stands with pencils. The piece was a terrific finale.

On Tuesday, Jan. 11, Cohasset Middle School band and chorus performed their winter concert. Due to the number of events scheduled for before the winter break, the Middle School decided to hold their concert in January, which extended the spirit of the holidays into the New Year. The Middle School music program, now under the direction of John DeWaal, a former Cohasset Middle/High School student himself, featured two bands and two choruses, and boasts larger numbers than ever before.

The sixth grade chorus opened the evening, beginning their set with a piece titled "Born Free." The piece highlighted each section, balancing and blending the sound together in complex rhythms and runs. Their second piece, "Danza!," was sung in two languages, English and Spanish. Set as a fast-paced dance, punctuated by a sharp, staccato beat, the piece featured the different vocal parts, harmoniously layered and well balanced. The piece ended with strong dynamics and accents, getting an enthusiastic response from the audience.

The second group to perform was the seventh and eighth grade chorus. Since there is no general music class this year, the students who would have been in the class were moved into the chorus. The seventh and eighth grade chorus, which is now more than 140 strong, balances beautifully due to the large numbers of students in each section. They began their set with the classic American melody "Amazing Grace." Beginning with sopranos and altos, before layering the tenors and bass underneath, the piece featured sweeping four-part harmonies and complex trade-offs of the melody. The second song, "Gabi Gabi," is South African in origin. It opened with the melody in the soprano section, the altos singing the harmony and the tenors and bass singing the "echo." The melody line was passed off between the different parts, while maintaining an exceptionally well-balanced harmony. The two choruses combined for their final number, the iconic "Sleigh Ride." Remarkably fast-paced, the melody line was passed between the sopranos and altos to the tenors and bass parts, and it is clear that the students were having a great time.

The sixth grade band performed next, opening with "Tornado!" Beginning with a very slick xylophone solo, the piece evokes an approaching tornado. The reed section did a very effective job of conveying this theme, using their instruments to recreate the sound of wind in dry grass. The piece creates tension by using staccato and legato sections to produce contrasting melody lines, representing the approaching tornado. The piece builds in a pulsing crescendo, taking the audience into the midst of the tornado, before coming to an abrupt ending. The band's second piece, "The Lost Tomb," was an equally exciting piece – the legato beginning gave way to the exotic "Egyptian" theme, evoking old-fashioned adventure movies, making good use of the low brass and drums. The reeds, flutes, and high brass passed the dynamic melody line amongst themselves. This dynamic was reversed a little way into the piece, with the brass carrying the melody lines and the reeds and flutes adding a staccato punctuation. The two lines blended together to an impressive, epic-movie-esque, ending.

The seventh and eighth grade band performed next, beginning their set with "Colors of the Wind," from Disney's well-known movie, "Pocahontas." The brass traded off the melody with the reeds and flutes while the percussion section effectively set the mood for the piece. The harmonies were fantastic all throughout the piece, creating an overall very powerful piece. The band's final piece for the evening was the highly original "Junkyard Jam," a fast-paced jam featuring the percussion section. Instead of just using drums and other typical percussion instruments for this piece, the band used trashcans, recycling bins, and other things one could find lying around. The percussion sections' soli really stole the show, particularly with the rest of the band joining in, drumming on their stands with pencils. The piece was a terrific finale.

The concert was heralded as a huge success. John DeWaal, in his first semester of teaching at Cohasset Middle/High School, managed both Middle School Choruses and the Middle School Bands and works with about 340 students every three days. He likes working with both the chorus and the band, being able to work with the more familiar element of the band and expand his horizons by working with the chorus. When preparing for the concert, Mr. DeWaal said that it had come together most strongly in the past couple of weeks. Since the chorus has been replaced the general music course, Mr. DeWaal has been working with six chorus classes, and began combining them shortly before the concert. However, the whole thing was a huge success. Future projects Cohasset can look forward to? The seventh and eighth grade band and chorus will be competing at Canobie Lake Park in the spring, and at the spring concert, audiences might be treated to a piece from a popular movie. After this concert, I'm sure audiences will eagerly anticipate more.

Recalling those old-fashioned winters

SENIOR SCENE

LOUISE SMULLEN

There was one slope which was the very best, and my friend Grace and I would be there at every opportunity whizzing down and then trudging all the way back up only to whiz back down.

This winter reminds me of those in my childhood, when it seemed like there was snow on the ground all winter long. How exciting it was then to see a storm bringing with it wind driving the snow into deep drifts. It meant snow forts, making snowmen if the snow was damp enough, creating snow angels, and best of all, coasting downhill on a good fast sled. I remember the Christmas day when I received a Flexible Flyer. That sled got more use than anything else I had.

Across the street from our school was a place called the hollow. It was like a huge bowl with slopes all around going down to the bottom. There was one slope which was the very best, and my friend Grace and I would be there at every opportunity whizzing down and then trudging all the way back up only to whiz back down.

We lived in the Houghs Neck section of Quincy, only a few minutes from the beach. I remember one particularly cold winter when the salt water was frozen over. There is a small island not too distant from the beach and one day Grace and I walked across the salt water ice to explore the island. Another day we decided to walk out to the channel. However, it got a little scary and we turned back fortunately. I guess we didn't know at the time that it was a very dangerous thing to do, but I must say that it was fun. Of course, I don't feel the same about snow today, but it does dress up the drabness of winter.

We have had to cancel one of the lunch dates because of snow. Otherwise, programs have gone on as planned. Before one of the luncheons a representative from Norwell Home Care joined us in a game of Bingo, with prizes awarded to the winners. At another session our guest speaker was Dr. Schlasinger, neurologist from Braintree Rehab. His subject was incontinence, the causes and what to do about it.

Seniors were treated to a pasta lunch at the Lightkeepers Cottage. It was cooked and served by Cohasset's policemen. There must have been 60 or more in attendance. This was sparked by Gregg Hartnet, the Police Association's liaison with Cohasset Elder Affairs. After the luncheon he introduced many of the off-duty officers who had helped with the serving and cleaning up. They looked so young.

It's that time of year again when folks will be donning pink and red and attending the annual Valentine Tea. It will be held on Feb. 10. This year the group will be treated to songs from "The Sound of Music" presented by a soloist. Don't forget to sign up early – space is limited. For more information watch for the February VISTA or call the Center at 781-383-9112. We're looking forward to see you there.

The winter of our discontent

FOR THE RECORD

GREGORY MATHIS

OK, enough is enough.

With all due respect to Shakespeare's Richard III — "Now," (2011) "is the winter of our discontent."

It is snowing as I write this week's column Friday morning (Jan. 21) and it will probably be snowing as some read this on Wednesday (Jan. 26). And if it's not snowing, there's still plenty piled up to serve as a reminder that we're still in the unrelenting clutches of Old Man Winter.

Until a week before Christmas we'd had nary a flake of snow in these parts; we've been pummeled since then. Yes, we've had snowier winters (remember the mid-1990s?) and bigger snowstorms (the Blizzard of '78 is still the standard) than we've had so far, but it's hard to remember a more brutal month-long stretch of snow and storms.

Even the hardiest of New Englanders appear to be beaten down by the weather. Those who can be counted on to offer up dismissive catch phrases such as, "Well this is New England, what do you expect?" seem to have little to say now.

This is New England and enjoying all four seasons is one of its charms. But as quickly as the weather is known to change, New Englanders are just as quick to complain about it no matter the season.

To say everybody is fed up and sick of winter is probably an exaggeration. Snowplow drivers aren't complaining too much. Hardware stores that sell snow blowers, shovels and ice melting products are counting on more bad weather. Skiers are certainly enjoying the snow, if and when they can reach their destination. Kids seem to be having fun, missing some school and hanging around the neighborhood building snow forts, snow tunnels and snow men that may not melt until May at this rate. And the meteorologists certainly like it because it gives them something to talk about every night, even though most of them don't seem to know what they're talking about.

Who's not having fun? Just about everyone else. Especially those who have a long commute to work. Getting to work during these powerful mid-week storms has been a challenge and even dangerous for some drivers. It also makes it tough to get business done. For instance, during the Wednesday, Jan. 12 storm our Marshfield building lost power for about five hours, bringing our newspaper production process to a screeching halt as our Plymouth and Raynham offices are also connected to the computer servers in that office. The time lost resulted in several of our newspapers being delayed and coming out a day later than normal, which rarely happens.

Local town budgets are bearing the brunt of this cold and snowy winter and have long since plowed through the annual snow and ice removal allotment. While that's nothing new, we are still only in January with potentially a lot of winter still ahead.

Just how much winter is left? Groundhog Day is next Wednesday, Feb. 2 and before you dismiss the accuracy and validity of a rodent being dragged out of a dark hole in Punxsutawney, Pennsylvania consider these statistics: while Groundhog Day proponents will tell you the accuracy of the forecast is between 75-90 percent, other independent studies have concluded the success rate is more like 37 percent. Interestingly, the National Climatic Data Center has stated that the accuracy rate is around 39 percent.

As far as what reputable weather agencies such as AccuWeather are predicting, February could be as bad or worse than January, especially with the frequency of storms.

For that reason alone, I'm hoping Punxsutawney Phil doesn't see his shadow next Wednesday.

Learning about African culture

dents got to hear from one of their own about the life and culture in Kenya," Collins said. The 25-year-old spent the better part of 2010 in Nairobi, Kenya working closely with more than a dozen orphanages as the manager of the Flying Kites Oasis Program.

The Art Center folks worked with the teachers and administrators to develop a schedule and program that worked within the curriculum and provided an enhancement to classroom learning.

Collins said so much of what is heard about Africa in the media, novels and textbooks is negative – extreme poverty, civil war and disease.

"There is such a focus on the problems Africa faces, but we want to give alongside of that an understanding of the richness of the African culture," Collins said.

Two weeks after the students heard a first-hand account of life in an African country from Noble, the second installment of the program brought the music of Africa alive.

Drummer Tony Fonseca from Randolph-based All Hands Drumming came to the middle high school library on Thursday, Jan. 20 to teach the sixth graders the power of percussion.

"(Fonseca) has an unbelievable infectious enthusiasm, but the gravitas of a serious musician. He had all the kids with instruments in their hands," Collins said.

Fonseca met with sixth grade groups all day long. In addition to traditional African drums, they used cowbells, conch shells, clappers and bells.

"He really came with an assortment of amazing percussion instruments. Anyone who came in the room wanted to see what was going on," Collins said. "I witnessed how music can truly bring people together. It reminded me once again why arts are so important in education."

Next up in the program is a hands-on study in Adinkra, a centuries old tradition in western Africa (originating in Ghana). Adinkra printing is a language of visual symbols – each expressing different values and life philosophies.

After learning about the history of adinkra, the students will be asked to choose an adinkra symbol that's meaningful to them, and put it alongside a symbol of their own that reflects an aspect of their life.

The students create a stamp of both symbols on foam core printing blocks and then stamp them on a piece of rice paper to produce a final project.

"It's a way for the students to get a glimpse of an African tradition that has universal meaning," Collins said.

The art project is also tied into a writing assignment.

"We've been so excited to collaborate with both Cohasset and Scituate schools. The administrators, the teacher and the students are so open to learning and inviting other modalities into the classroom. We've really seen the kids come alive (in this program)," Collins said.

"We hope it's a learning piece that stays with the students and we hope it ignites some of those sparks in these kids," she said.

The Cohasset Rotary Club was enthusiastic about bringing this curriculum enrichment program to the schools. They donated $1000 to get the program up and running.

"One of the Rotary foundations is to advance world understanding and peace through education. We thought this was a great opportunity to expose kids in Cohasset to another culture," said Rich Fitzpatrick, president of the Cohasset Rotary Club.

Kristi McNary is delighted with the cowbell rhythms.

"I witnessed how music can truly bring people together. It reminded me once again why arts are so important in education."

Plymouth Co. Mosquito Control Project guidelines

Plymouth County Mosquito Control Project understands that there may be some individuals who want to have their property legally excluded from the pesticide applications used in mosquito control. As a result, the Project would like to inform those individuals with the steps necessary to make such a request, as specified by Massachusetts Department of Agricultural Resources regulations.

- Such application is made by a person living on, or legally in control of said property.
- The application must be sent in the form of a certified letter to the municipal clerk's office by March 1 annually.
- The letter must include the name, address and telephone number of the person making the request.
- The letter must include the address of the property to be excluded.
- The letter should include a description of the types of pesticide application programs for which exclusion is requested.

Additionally, the person requesting the exclusion has the responsibility to mark the boundaries or areas to be excluded at least every 50 feet with orange surveyor's tape to clearly define the area of exclusion. These markings shall be made known to the Project and the Project will be responsible for communicating the details of the markings to the individuals who will carry out the pesticide applications.

While the application is sent to the municipal clerk's office, it is important to understand that the role of clerk's office in this process is simply to be the recipient of the certified letter. All questions concerning these regulations should be directed to the Plymouth County Mosquito Control Project at 781-585-5450 or the local board of health. Additionally, the Project has a link on its website, under Our Program, that will allow individuals to fully read 333 CMR: MA Pesticide Board Standards for Application.

BOYS BASKETBALL

One goal met

By William Wassersug
WWASSERS@CNC.COM

The Cohasset boys basketball team accomplished the first of their goals for the season on Sunday night, qualifying for the MIAA Division 4 Tournament with a 53-40 win over Hull at Cohasset High School in a game postponed from Friday night.

The win improved the Skippers to 10-1 for the season.

Robert Jones scored 22 points, and Sam Richardson added 18 for the Skippers.

Robbie Mahoney and Shane Haggerty each scored five and Kyrel Jaundoo chipped in three.

Jones was especially effective down the stretch, hitting all eight of his free throws.

As a team, Cohasset made eight-of-10 free throws in the fourth quarter after Hull cut the Skipper lead to five twice in the final two minutes.

"We'll take the win," Cohasset coach Bo Ruggiero said. "We accomplished the first of our goals. We qualified for the tournament. Our next goal is to win the league. We play East Bridgewater next. We'll take it one game at a time."

Cohasset is currently tied with Mashpee for first-place in the South Shore League.

Both have 8-1 records.

The teams meet up one more time later this season in Cohasset.

The Skippers are at East Bridgewater tonight.

East Bridgewater checks in at 1-12.

Cohasset won their first meeting 68-47 at home.

The Skippers follow that with a home game against Harwich on Tuesday and then head to Carver Friday night.

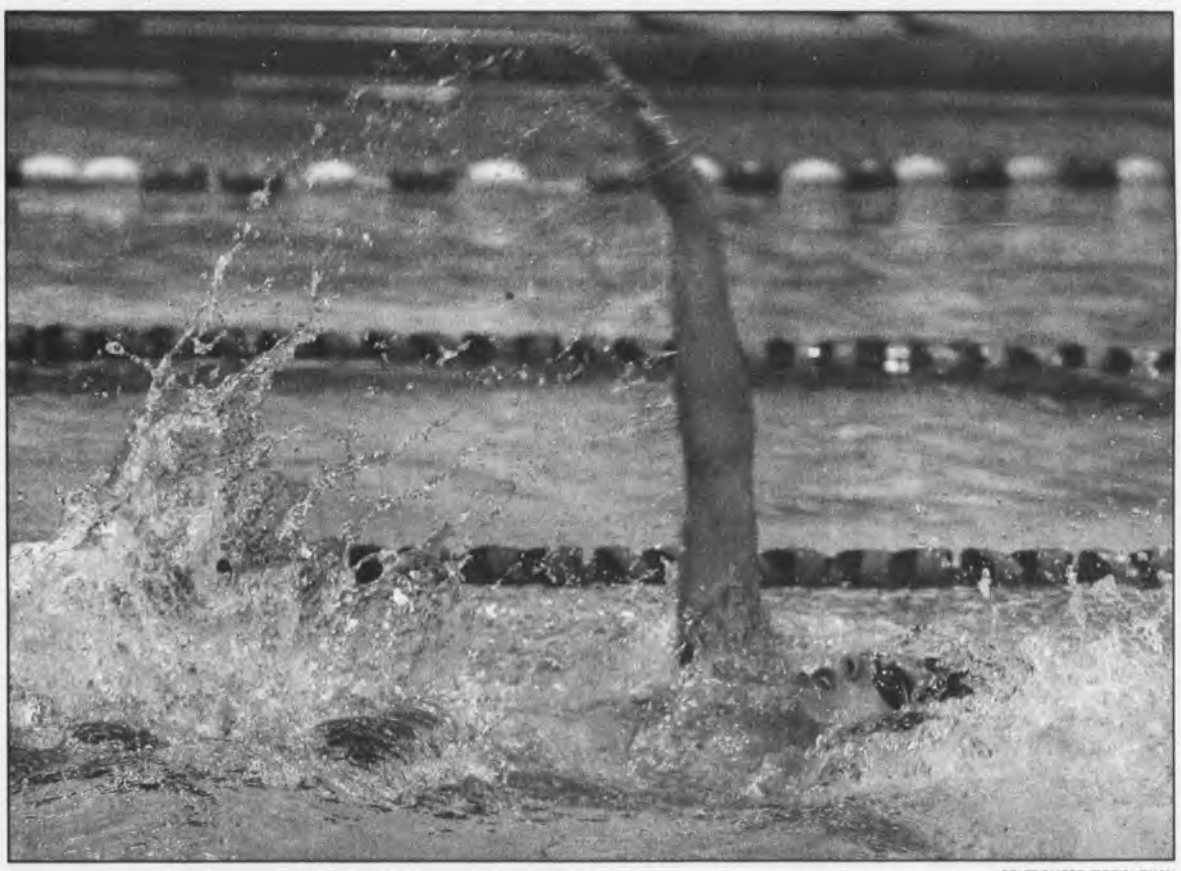
The girls basketball team has also qualified for the Tournament.

The defending Div. 4 state champions have notched three straight wins since they lost their first game of the season to Norwell Jan. 11, giving themselves a chance to defend their crown.

Cohasset beat Abington 43-37, Newburyport 47-39 and Hull 68-48.

The girls were scheduled to play at East Bridgewater Thursday night.

Results were unavailable at press time.



The girls host Newburtport on Sunday at 3:30 p.m. and will head to Harwich on Tuesday.

The schedule doesn't get easier after that with a home game against Carver and road trips to Rockland and Norwell still on the agenda.

SWIMMING

Success stories

The Cohasset High School swim team has had many successful stories this season.

The team has been led by senior captains Olivia Murphy, Michelle Berube and Jack Carrier.

While all three have had successful seasons in the pool, their leadership has been most valuable.

Every member of the team has scored points so far that have been important as all the meets have been close.

Kayla Orner, basically a first year diver is on the cusp of qualifying for the South Sectional diving championships and the girls team has qualified two relays for South Sectionals.

The team consists of: Berube, Murphy, Carrier, who is just .3 seconds away from qualifying for South Sectionals in the 50 free, Moira Donahue, Michaela Brophy, Aniko Haber, Orner, Hope Kissick, Maggie Littlejohn, McKenzie Axelson, Christine Guinne, Bobby Nahill, Ryan McCarthy, Morgan McCarthy, Clarke Indek, Brodie Jackish and Chris Quebec.

Berube, Carrier, Donahue, Haber, Littlejohn, Orner and Axelson have all had multiple first place finishes this season.

Freshman Clarke Indek been a big factor with his extreme versatility, swimming six different individual events thus far in the season.

He's accumuled first place finishes in all individual swims so far.

Indek has also been on two relays in each meet. He has qualified for the state championships in three individual events.

HOCKEY

Rookies melt the ice

It was a night for rookies as the Cohasset High School hockey team beat South Shore League opponent Harwich/Upper Cape Tech (UCT) Rough Riders 13-0 at the Weymouth Connell Rink on Saturday.

Senior goalie Jack Nelson and freshman goalie Brandon Winn split the game each shutting out the Rough Riders.

The Skippers 7-3-1 (5-2-1 SSL), had goals from the usual suspects with Anders Goetz scoring a goal and John Collins scoring two with one assist after playing only one-and-a half periods.

Taking two

SPECIAL TO THE COHASSET MARINER

The Skippers had a busy Saturday, wrestling four schools in one sitting, and did well, winning two of the four matches despite missing two seniors.

"Going into Saturdays matches, we were down two seniors, Justin Yeager (160) and Thomas Flibotte (171), but we were able to overcome that and still come away with two victories," said Cohasset head coach Torin Sweeney.

Cohasset faced Bristol Plymouth first, and came out on top with a 43-27 win.

Both freshman Harry Helbock(103) and junior captain Gus Helbock (112/119) had early wins, and sophomore Harry Braga (119), junior Derek Froio

Other goals were scored by junior Jamie Faber, who had two goals and three assists, senior Sam Leahy with one gaol, sophomore Conner Goetz with a goal. Junior Vinny Calorio had a goal and two assists and senior Travers Craven had three assists.

The night's big story, however, was the three freshmen rookies who rocketed the Skippers to the win.

Tommy O'Brien, Chris Cohen and Mickey Barry all tallied their first landmarks as high school varsity players.

For Cohen and Barry, it was their first high school goal, but for O'Brien it was his first high school hat trick.

"All three of these guys are legit players", remarked Cohasset coach Bob Walsh. "Although O'B and Cohen are small players, they've been playing in the varsity games pretty much since the beginning of the season.

"With Tommy (O'Brien) and Chris (Cohen), we all knew it was just a matter of time before they would settle in and start scoring. Once they started finding the net, it should be fun to watch. It's great that we're just halfway through the season and they're finding it now. It should make for an exciting rest of the season."

Barry has had a different experience.

"For Mickey Barry, however, he has just been getting better with each passing game," Walsh said. "After converting Mick to a defenseman at the beginning of the season, he has just kept improving each game so now it's only fitting that he should score his first goal.

"This team has so much skill at each grade. When they keep their focus, they're a fun team to watch and coach. We've been on the wrong end of that as well, in the past, so we try to keep everyone in check."

In their previous game, Cohasset beat Carver/Sacred Heart 4-2 Wednesday at Bridgewater Ice Arena.

Cohasset got goals from John Collins (assisted by Brian Scott and Chris Lund) and Travers Craven (assisted by Tommy O'Brien) in the first period, Alex Evens (Brian Scott assist) in the second period and Anders Goetz (with help from Sam Leahy) in the third.

Walsh was also impressed with his freshmen in the Carver game.

"I've been impressed with the skills that the freshmen have brought to the table this year," he said. "I knew Chris Lund prior to high school and have always been impressed with the type of kid he is in addition to his hockey skills. Mickey Barry has been one of the more impressive guys because he is making a difficult transition from playing forward, (pretty much all of his life), to a defenseman. Next to what senior Jack Nelson did, (converting to a goalie in his junior year), converting to a "D" position is one of the more difficult things to do; and to do it as well as Mickey has done is a really impressive thing. This week, freshman Derek Benson logged a regular varsity shift on defense, for the first time. He was a bit nervous but made some solid plays and solid decisions as a defenseman."

Walsh has spotted talent up front with his younger charges as well.

"On the forward side of the freshmen, Tommy O'Brien and Chris Cohen have been regulars as varsity players. They both have great hockey presences," he said. "They're tough kids and fun to watch; like when Anders Goetz was a freshman. Terence Doonan and Colin Whelan were both brought up to play Wednesday night's game and did very well. The pace of the game is a little quicker than what they are used to but they all showed poise and skills. These guys are among the smallest high school hockey players out there.

"I've always been curious about coaches that don't like or discourage small hockey players from their teams. I've seen alot of those guys [coaches] around, at all levels. In all the years I have spent on the bench, the smaller players have, (more often than not), been the guys that have a tendency to show how much heart they have. What they lack in size, in a lot of cases, they make up for in speed and skills."

The Skippers face off against another league opponent, Hull on Saturday night at 8 p.m. at Connell Rink.

Cohasset improved to 7-3-1 overall and 6-2-1 in the South Shore League.

The Skippers are still in the hunt for a South Shore League title, but will need help from other teams to make it happen.

Next up was Tri-County, who outwrestled the Skippers in a 57-19 Cohasset loss.

The Helbock brothers both contributed wins however, with Harry scoring a pin.

Froio and Kinnealey won their matches.

The third match, against Southeastern VoTech, ended with a 61-9 loss.

Sophomore Tom Ryan, wrestling at 145 lbs, won his match 12-6, and Derek Froio and Kinnealey remained undefeated by winning their bouts.

"There were mostly freshman and sophomores starting, other than the four juniors that started, and all had a good day," Coach Sweeney said. "We wrestled well."

They wrestled well enough to win against Bristol Aggie in the last match of the day.

Kinnealey and 8th grader Michael Yerardi (285) finished the night off strong for the Skippers.

"A lot of kids got their first varsity wins which helped us beat Bristol Aggie, and we needed every one of those, because we lost a couple of kids to injuries along the way in the match," remarked Sweeney. "Two in the day is great, and we're 9-6-1 at this point, with a match pending Wednesday night, and I think that's a great record at this point in the season with the youth we have starting."

The Wednesday match against South Shore VoTech was postponed to Monday night (Jan. 31) due to Wednesday's snow storm.

Notre Dame skiers win three more

The Notre Dame Academy Ski Team had one of their best stretches of the season last week with three impressive wins over a four day span.

The NDA girls also tied the league record twice during that time for lowest points in a Ski East race.

The Cougars have now won six straight races, all by a considerable margin. NDA started their week off right last Wednesday, January 19 with an impressive performance in the giant slalom at Blue Hills where they placed 6 racers in the top 10 and scored 33 points, 70 points better than second-place, Hingham High School.

Coming in second place overall out of the 71 varsity racers was sophomore Amelia Brown with a very fast time of 28.26. Junior Marie Gilman barely missed the podium with an impressive fourth place finish and a time of 29.18 seconds.

Also having great runs were Jess Peterson with a 14th place finish, Dylanne Axelson 15th, Katie McNamara 20th and Brooke Morley 22nd.

NDA was right back at Blue Hills the following night for their first slalom race of the season.

The Cougars did not let the freezing cold or very icy course get in their way as they put up a tremendous performance sweeping the podium and tying a league mark which they set last season for lowest points in a race with 28. At the top of the podium for NDA was Amelia Brown who was the only female skier under 28 seconds with a time of 27.66.

In second-place overall was Marie Gilman with a great time of 28.77.

Third place overall went to Victoria Mulkern with a time of 29.12 which is the best finish so far of her young career. Grace Petro finished fifth overall with a time of 31.33.

Rounding out the scoring points for NDA was Audrey Madigan and Katie McNamara. Madigan finished in seventh place with a 31.72 and McNamara in 10th with 33.26. This was also McNamara's best finish of the season. Other racers with good finishes were Dylanne Axelson in 11th place, Jess Peterson in 16th, Erin Murray 17th and Brooke Morley 25th. Notre Dame finished up their long week of races on Saturday, January 22 with a two-run slalom event at Ragged Mountain in New Hampshire.

Due to a course technical issue, the race was shortened to only one run. The Cougars again showed their incredible depth with another record tying performance placing six skiers in the top eight overall for 28 points, far outdistancing Hingham High School in second place with 103.

Grabbing the top spot for NDA was Amelia Brown with fantastic time of 30.61.

Marie Gilman continued her great season with her best finish of the year. Gilman placed second overall with a time of 31.16 seconds.

Grace Petro again showed her great consistency with a fourth place finish and a time of 32.22. Petro has scored points for NDA in all 6 races this season. Victoria Mulkern finished in sixth-place with a time of 34.06.

Great races were also put up by all the varsity alternates for NDA who include Meaghan Sullivan, Taylor Morley, Mimi Teixeira, Colleen Cassidy, Meredith Flaherty, Maggie Lewis, Kathleen Kelly, Christine Feloney, Amanda Grady, Megan Clark, Abby Stover, Isabelle Nuesse and Jess Nevins. The top JV finisher was Abby Carrier.

LIFE AT CHS

NATALIE DIGNAM

Tickets for the semi cost $10 and are on sale through this Thursday. The student council must sell and minimum of 50 tickets in advance in order to hold the dance.

The term is finally coming to an end at CHS after a day extension. This Tuesday, Art Mag met for the first time. Art Mag will begin meeting regularly every Tuesday in Mrs. Berkowitz room and is always looking for new members! A half-day on Wednesday provided a much-needed break from all those overly stressful snow days and delayed finals (don't worry A.P. Stats… you'll finish those tests sometime this year…). Students participating in Model U.N. at the Boston Sheraton will be leaving school this Thursday and returning on Sunday. When asked to describe the Model U.N. program, senior Emily Toomey said, "This is the first year Cohasset has participated in a Harvard Model UN Program, so everyone is a bit nervous. Hopefully, past experience with debate that most participants have had will assist us in using information to create arguments". With that in mind, good luck to those students participating this year, and hopefully Model U.N. will become a tradition at CHS.

This Friday, A.P. money is due, so don't forget or you won't get to take the A.P. exam or get A.P. credit for that class! Each test costs $86 and should be made out to Cohasset High School. This Friday is also the Junior-Senior Semi Formal. Tickets for the semi cost $10 and are on sale through this Thursday. The student council must sell and minimum of 50 tickets in advance in order to hold the dance. Tickets will be on sale at the door as well. In the event that fewer than 50 tickets are sold, the dance will be cancelled. All profits go to the senior class, so help us out and buy a ticket!

Natalie Dignam is a senior at Cohasset High. Her column runs weekly during the school year.

Caroline Donohue, second from right, and Gracyn Lord, right, check out pictures from Helen O'Meara's troop from Dorchester. Helen, who is now 87, was a member of Troop 16 in 1934 and has kept in touch with her fellow girl scouts over the years.

Troop talk

Brownies learn about strangers, scouting history

Staff photos by Robin Chan

Right, Emma Cifrino, 7, helps bring holiday cheer while singing the extra words to "Rudolph the Red Nose Reindeer" for her great aunt Helen O'Meara, 87, of Hingham who came to talk about what it was like to be a Girl Scout in 1934.

Helen O'Meara of Hingham shows how the Girl Scout uniform has progressed over the years since she was a Girl Scout with Troop 16 in 1934. The event was held last month at the Cohasset Golf Club.

Emma Cifrino, 7, of Brownie Troop 74022 pays close attention to Cohasset Police Sgt. Jeff Treanor who was talking to Brownies about dealing with strangers.

Sgt. Jeff Treanor hands a coloring safety book to Aiko White, 7, before his presentation to the second grade Brownies from Troop 74022.

Ava Lee, 7, holds her hand up to ask Police Sgt. Jeff Treanor a question during his presentation about dealing with strangers.

SALOME'S STARS
FOR RELEASE WEEK OF
FEB. 7, 2011

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) A gracious Lamb can learn more about a problem-filled situation than one who is openly suspicious of what could be happening. A friend might offer some well-directed advice.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) Getting adjusted to an unexpected change might be difficult for the Bovine who prefers things to go according to plan. But help could come from a most welcome source.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) This could be a good time to get a head start on those career-related plans. The sooner you check out the pluses and minuses, the sooner you can act on your information.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) A personal situation you thought would no longer present a problem suddenly could produce some surprises. Try to sort things out with the help of trusted colleagues.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) An upcoming move holds both anticipation and anxiety for Leos and Leonas who have some big decisions to make. Advice is plentiful, but it's up to you to decide which way you want to go.

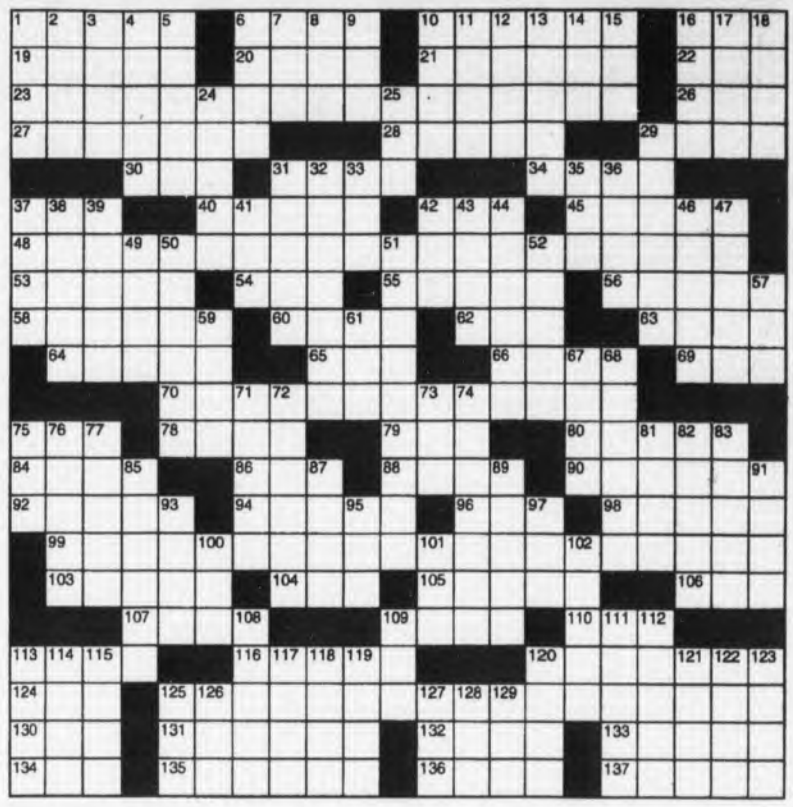
VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) Someone from a previous project could provide valuable guidance on how to handle a current problem, especially where it might involve a legal matter.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) A business situation presents some unexpected complications. But rather than try to handle them all at once, it would be best to deal with them one at a time.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) You just might get what you want, despite the odds against it. In any event, be sure to thank all those people involved who believed in you and went to bat for you.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) Before you even hint at an accusation, remember that you'll have to prove what you say. So be sure you have what you need to back up your comments.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) A romantic situation takes an unexpected turn that favors some Sea Goats, but causes others to reassess how they've been handling the relationship.



AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) A surprise turn of events could unsettle the Water Bearer. But it also might help open up an entirely different way of working out an important matter.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) A smoothly running operation could bump up against an obstacle. This is where your ability to assess situations and make adjustments can restore things to normal.

Level: Moderate

Here's How It Works:

Sudoku puzzles are formatted as a 9x9 grid, broken down into nine 3x3 boxes. To solve a sudoku, the numbers 1 through 9 must fill each row, column and box. Each number can appear only once in each row, column and box. You can figure out the order in which the numbers will appear by using the numeric clues already provided in the boxes. The more numbers you name, the easier it gets to solve the puzzle!

Lecture on nonviolence at Glastonbury Abbey

Glastonbury Abbey's Lecture Series Listening to Other Voices: Be Not Afraid: Do Justice, Act Kindly," will be presented at 7:15 p.m., on Thursday, March 18. The Rev. Francis X. Clooney, S.J., will present a lecture titled "Learning from Hinduism: Nonviolence in Mind and Heart."

In his comparative theological work, Fr. Clooney, professor at Harvard Divinity School and director of the Center for the Study of World Religions, has sought to bring together Hindu and Christian wisdom. From the Upanishads to Gandhi, Hinduism offers insights into nonviolence and its grounding in interiority and wisdom. In his talk Fr. Clooney will show how these Hindu traditions harmonize well with Christian teaching and practice, from Jesus to Dorothy Day, of the nonviolent way of life. He also suggests that learning itself can be reimagined as a nonviolent activity, grounded in an openness of mind and heart that respects the particularities of both one's own and other's faith and experience

Lectures are free – donations welcome. The program will take place in the Conference Center at Glastonbury Abbey, 16 Hull St., Hingham. Reservations will not be taken. Seating is limited and on a first-come, first-served basis. For more information, visit the website at glastonburyabbey.org.

'Understudy' needs more work

Boston audiences have been treated to first-rate productions of Theresa Rebeck plays in recent seasons – most notably the Huntington Theatre Company's memorable mountings of "Bad Dates" and "Mauritius." The Lyric Stage Company's current offering, "The Understudy," is no exception. With "The Understudy," which had a summer 2008 Williamstown run before moving to Broadway last season, Rebeck offers up a satirical look at today's Broadway – where movie stars in search of credibility are welcomed by producers seeking big box office.

Set at an understudy rehearsal for a fictional Franz Kafka play, the plot revolves around the often contentious interaction between three characters: Jake (Kelby T. Akin), an on-the-rise action movie star making his Broadway debut; Roxanne (Laura Latreille), a failed actress turned sometimes overwrought, sometimes overwhelmed stage manager; and Harry (Christopher James Webb), as Jake's new understudy who was once engaged to Roxanne. From his opening diatribe, it is clear that Harry isn't keen on his new assignment or the "actor" he is understudying – even if his latest movie grossed $67 million in its opening week.

The actors engage in a spirited debate about their contributions, with Jake resentful of Harry's condescending attitude, while Roxanne boils over at the idea of working with the man who jilted her. Eventually, Harry and Roxanne are drawn back to each other, but not before she fits in some hot-and-heavy flirtation with Jake. The romantic entanglements of three characters are uninspired and predictable and ultimately add little to the proceedings.

Rebeck does better with the scenes from what is described as Kafka's "undiscovered masterpiece," evoking the writer's style if not work he would actually want to put his name on, and also her spot-one depiction of acting rivalries that are equal parts ego and insecurity. She also milks considerable mileage from a character we never see – a crew member who runs the show from the booth in what is very likely a marijuana-induced haze.

Director Larry Coen gets fine work from his very solid trio of actors, but the good performances aren't enough to compensate for the play's weaknesses. There are just too many implausible plot points for this backstage look at Broadway to be believable. Would Jake, one of the show's two stars, really be understudy for his also-above-the-title co-star - an even bigger name actor whom we hear about but never see? Would this pair of matinee idols really team up to do Kafka, even a "new" Kafka? Would a production starring two movie stars really have so many technical problems – even with a pot-head running the board? Would the slightly doughy Harry really have been hired to stand-in for the muscularly broad-shouldered Jake?

That said, there are many very funny lines here and well-staged sight gags, too, thanks in great part to Coen's briskly paced direction which is shown off to full advantage on Cristina Todesco's clever, ever-changing set.

The Lyric Stage Company of Boston will present "The Understudy" at 140 Clarendon St., Boston, through Jan. 29. For tickets and information, call 617-585-5678 or go online at lyricstage.com

MEN (NOT) AT WORK

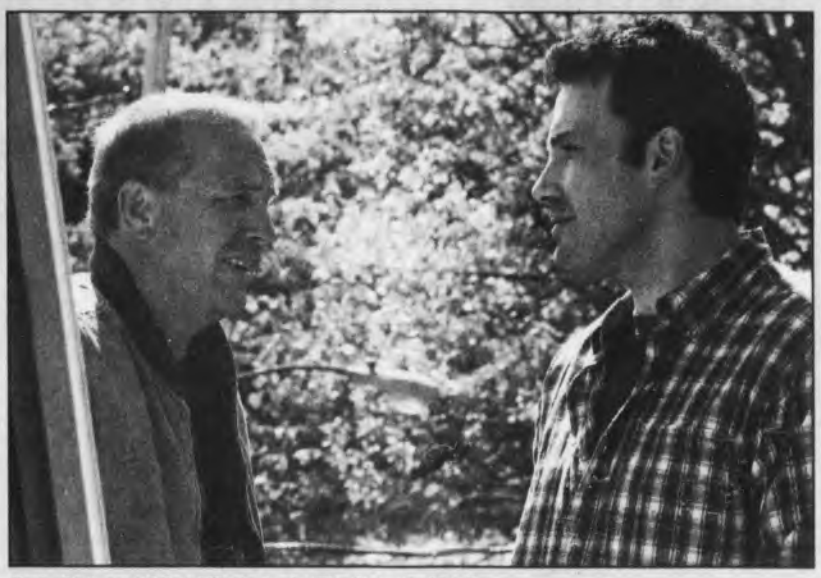
Ben Affleck gives a career-best performance in this tale for our troubled times

Film Review
AL ALEXANDER

The Company Men (A-)

It's no secret that as an actor, Ben Affleck is a bit of a lightweight. But if you give him the right part, one that takes advantage of his handsome unctuousness, he can be pretty close to terrific.

I'm thinking of the money-hungry Wall Street trader in "Boiler Room" or the smug, narcissistic executive from "Changing Lanes." Even in "The Town," there's an air of ruthlessness to him that forces you to look past the pretty face into the soul of a shallow man coasting on a deranged sense of entitlement.



With those kinds of roles, Affleck has shown an ability to vividly communicate the tug-of-war going on within his characters' dark souls. They love being bad, but their consciences won't allow them to fully enjoy it. The more you watch him play those parts, the more you appreciate what Affleck can do with them.

Yet, none of those plum roles prepares you for the level of artistry he brings to a jerk like Bobby Walker in "The Company Men," a timely tale about corporate downsizing.

Bobby's got it all — the luxurious suburban crib, the Porsche, the beautiful trophy wife (Rosemary DeWitt) and an always-improving golf game. As James Cagney would say, "Top of the world, Ma."

Then, out of the blue, the invincible crashes into the inevitable when Bobby gets the news that the Boston shipbuilding company responsible for his lavish lifestyle is no longer in need of his services. Its parent corporation, the profit-obsessed GTX, has decided to dump him and many of his coworkers simply because there's more money to be made by building derivatives than by building ships.

In the old days, hotshots like Bobby would probably just hookup with another conglomerate, but not in this pitiful economy of double-digit unemployment. Other jobs just aren't there, as Bobby is indignantly learning fast. That is unless you count the generous offer made by Bobby's brother-in-law, Jack (a never-better Kevin Costner), to come work for him building houses. You know, blue-collar work, making things — everything Bobby is so much not about. It's a career path he never envisioned, but without any other job offers, it's something he'll have to consider.

Kevin Costner and Ben Affleck star in "The Company Men."

But the shining star is Affleck, giving a career-best performance. The arc of his character is utterly predictable, but he fills the part of Bobby with so much nuance and truth that you feel like you've been on a very special journey, one that not only moves from the darkness to the light, but from the wallet to the heart.

It's in these scenes that Affleck truly excels, expressing all the anger, frustration and deflation of ego that will resonate with anyone who's ever lost a job. Affleck captures the interesting psychology of the way jobs are often connected to a man's virility and self-esteem. Once the most confident guy in the room, Bobby is now a deer in the headlights, as creditors tote away his life, piece by piece.

He's not alone, either. In short order, he's joined in the job market by two of his superiors — Chris Cooper's extremely proud and bitterly unhappy Phil Woodard, and Tommy Lee Jones' self-loathing Gene McClary, the company's No. 2 guy who makes the mistake of insubordinately speaking his mind to his old friend and boss, played superbly by a ruthless Craig T. Nelson.

It's interesting to watch how each man handles his plight. After eating a generous portion of humble pie, Bobby slowly reconnects with his family; Gene seeks solace in his mistress (Maria Bello), who, of all people, is the one orchestrating the massive firings at GTX; and Phil – sad, sad Phil – can't even summon the courage to tell his wife and kids that he not only lost his job, but he's fast learning he's too old to be considered for another.

Cooper is masterful in the part, relying on his wonderfully stoic face to mask the hatred, resentment and indignity that just may boil over into tragedy. Phil will simply break your heart.

The compassion you feel for the men is quite unexpected. There's not much to like at the beginning, when these spoiled, self-satisfied money-chasers were on the top of the heap. Why cry for them? Their downfall seems less tragic then the people who live paycheck to paycheck, and suddenly don't have a paycheck. But then you quickly grasp the irony that is so much a part of a script by John Wells ("ER," "The West Wing") that both humanizes and chastises the people who helped get us into this fix.

Sure, some of the loose ends get tied up a little too neatly, and there are more than a few contrivances. (Wells is from the world of TV, after all.) But he has a wonderful knack for wringing wrenching emotion from unexpected places.

"Company Men" also marks Wells' first foray into directing features, a task he performs competently. Of course, it doesn't hurt to have a cinematographer as accomplished as Roger Deakins ("True Grit") to cover your back. They prove a powerful combination, too, with Wells summoning outstanding performances, as Deakins hauntingly captures the beauty and despair enveloping neighborhoods in and around Boston, where the film was shot.

But the shining star is Affleck, giving a career-best performance. The arc of his character is utterly predictable, but he fills the part of Bobby with so much nuance and truth that you feel like you've been on a very special journey, one that not only moves from the darkness to the light, but from the wallet to the heart.

WINTER WOES

Fifth generation Cohasset resident Roger Maroni clears a path around his house on North Main Street following one of the region's recent storms. Snow-days off from school and the snow removal deficit are both adding up this winter.

Snow days and school

Osgood closed Thursday due to roof concerns

By Nancy White

The 36-hour snowstorm changed schedules at Cohasset Public Schools on three days this week.

On Tuesday the students were let out of school early. On Wednesday, school was canceled for all three schools as the town dug out – and was rained and snowed upon. On Thursday, all schools had a two-hour delay and Osgood School had another snow day because of precautionary safety concerns with heavy snow on the roof of the building.

Superintendent of Schools Denise Walsh said all three school buildings' roofs were inspected on Monday before this week's storm arrived. While all three schools had snow on them Osgood's design and pitch created more areas of snow drift.

Cat Dam

Public hearing is Feb. 10

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Next week the town's submission for the Cat Dam Notice of Intent heads for the primetime, once again.

The Conservation Commission is scheduled to hold its first public hearing on the notice of intent (NOI) this coming Thursday, Feb. 10. The public hearing is the start of a new chapter for the Cat Dam issue.

The opening and closing schedule of Cat Dam has been in the news since 2007. A conflict in the neighborhood surrounding Cat Dam has led to many hours of discussion with the Board of Selectmen.

Most recently, a majority of Selectmen pulled back the NOI, which has been developed by a town-paid engineer, for further review. A second study paid for by a group of residents calling themselves the Environmental 20 (the group consists of 20 families) was reviewed and ultimately, the selectmen chose to use that report as their NOI application to the Conservation Commission. That report calls for a much different and less drastic, operating schedule for the tide gates than the Hands-on police work

Students get exposure to department

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The Cohasset Police Department is working hard to create an organization focused on community policing.

As part of that effort, the police are reaching out to teens and young adults in the community and bringing them into the station to show them what policing is all about.

The Explorer program, an offshoot of Boy Scouts that focuses on career opportunities, is off to an enthusiastic start. In the fall three kids joined, and now 12 students — ages 14 through 20 both boys and girls — are involved in the program.

With the exposure to the program, Police Chief Mark DeLuca said, some of the students already know law enforcement is a career path they'd like to take.

Led by head Dispatcher Tom Wigmore, Animal Control Officer Paul Murphy and Officer Gregg Hartnett, the program gets to the heart of community policing.

"The program sheds light on what we do around here. The officers interacts with the kids, they can ask questions, it creates a relationship," DeLuca said.

Through the program, the students — all on their own time — are introduced to all phases of police work. They take scaled-down versions of typical police officer training (first aid, firearms, crime scene investigation, court procedure, community relations, etc.). Police hope to set up field trips so participants can see other segments of law enforcement, such as the Coast Guard or Environmental Police.

"We want to expose these kids and give them the opportunity to see what law enforcement is all about. It's not about riding around town with a uniform and a gun — it's really about community service," Murphy said.

Wigmore agrees. "Kids really need to know what goes on in the police department and understand we take a pro-active approach," he said.

The students are also given the chance to participate in police work. They helped out at Cohasset Day and they plan to help the department with detours and barricades during the Road Race by the Sea, the Cohasset Triathlon and other major town events.

"They're going to supplement the police department," Murphy said. Each of the Explorers received a uniform (a polo shirt) to help identify them; the group aims to have bi-monthly meetings.

"They give us a hand and learn some

Cohasset Police Officer Patrick Reardon assists motorists at a three-car motor vehicle crash on Route 3A between Pond and Beechwood streets around noon on Tuesday. There were no injuries reported and two cars had to be towed.

Traffic on Route 3A near Pond Street had to be diverted due to poor road conditions and a three-car accident around noon on Tuesday. The accident was weather related and the highway was closed for about 30 minutes.

Weather-related accident ties up traffic

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Police said there was a weather-related, chain-reaction three-vehicle accident on Route 3A in Cohasset at 12:12 p.m. Tuesday (Feb. 1) that closed the highway for about 30 minutes.

Three vehicles were involved: a 1999 Toyota Camry operated by a 25-year-old Duxbury man; a 2008 Suzuki SX4 operated by a 59-year-old Quincy woman; and a Nissan Altima operated by a 22-year-old Cohasset man.

The accident occurred near 670 Chief Justice Cushing Highway, which is between Pond and Beechwood streets. There were no reported injuries; two of the vehicles were towed, police said.

Snowmobile

A 51-year-old Cohasset man who was riding a snowmobile in Wompatuck State Park was issued a citation by the Environmental Police because the snowmobile was not registered, police said. The incident was triggered by a call from a concerned citizen about an "out-of-control" man on a snowmobile, who "yelled and pointed in her face" after she asked him to slow down. The call came in at about noon on Saturday (Jan. 29). An officer stopped the man off Doane Street near the entrance to the state park. Cohasset called the Environmental Police which is familiar with recreational vehicles.

Check

A contractor having a problem with collecting a check from a customer reported the matter to police last week. But police explained it was a civil matter and referred him to small claims court.

Cat

A motorist tried to find the owner of a cat that he struck on Stockbridge Street last Monday (Jan. 24) but was unsuccessful. The motorist put the cat into a paper bag so schoolchildren on their way home would not see it and notified the police. The Animal Control Officer responded and found the owners, police said.

Firewood

The new owner of a house reported to police last Monday (Jan. 24) that firewood had been taken from the residence. The homeowner thought the firewood came with the house and was part of the purchase and sale agreement. Police explained it was a civil matter and needed to be worked out with the Realtors.

Credit card

On the direction of her credit card company, a Cohasset resident notified police last Tuesday (Jan. 25) that her credit card was lost and had been fraudulently used, police said.

Snow blowing

A concerned citizen notified police last Thursday (Jan. 27) that someone was blowing snow into Depot Court with a snow blower, which is a violation of the town's bylaw, police said. Police spoke to the person with the snow blower who was very cooperative and cleaned up the snow.

Sideswiped

The exhaust pipe on the town ambulance, operated by a 42-year-old paramedic, sideswiped a 2007 Toyota Yaris on Summer Street last Friday (Jan. 28). The tailpipe scraped the side of the car, causing minor damage. Police said the street is very narrow due to the snow banks and that played a role. The tailpipe on the ambulance has been modified and is extended three inches to the side so it can accept an adapter in the fire station, police said.

Handicap placard

A 68-year-old Cohasset woman reported to police that her handicap-parking placard was missing. She needed to file a police report in order to get a replacement from the Registry of Motor Vehicles, police said.

Lost wallet

A 54-year-old Cohasset man reported to police on Saturday (Jan. 29) that he had lost his wallet in the Stop & Shop parking lot. The brand of the wallet is Polo; inside were his driver's license and one credit card.

Nee named Secretary of Veterans' Services

Coleman Nee of Cohasset was sworn in last week as state Secretary of Veterans' Services. He replaces long-time Secretary Thomas Kelley.

Nee, who has worked as Undersecretary of Veterans' Services since 2008, is a veteran of the United States Marine Corps and Operation Desert Storm. As Secretary, Nee has pledged to focus on strengthening operations and service delivery to veterans and their families.

"Coleman Nee will continue be a strong advocate for Massachusetts veterans as Secretary of Veterans' Services," said Governor Deval Patrick. "His demonstrated ability to build diverse partnerships within the veterans' community and his commitment to streamlining services will ensure that Massachusetts continues to lead the nation in supporting the men and women who have served our country and our Commonwealth."

"Coleman has been a vital part of our efforts to support veterans from across the Commonwealth," said Lieutenant Governor Timothy Murray, who chairs the Governor's Advisory Council on Veterans' Services. "Under Coleman's guidance, we will continue to be a national leader in supporting our veterans, particularly those who return from service in Iraq and Afghanistan."

As Secretary, Nee will continue to work with federal, state and municipal partners, veteran service officers and organizations to increase the efficiency of providing benefits to veterans and families; expand the Massachusetts Women's Veterans' Network to meet the needs of this growing segment of the veterans population; and address the issue of homelessness among veterans to provide all homeless persons who have served their country with an opportunity for permanent shelter and services that will support them in becoming self-sufficient and healthy.

As Undersecretary of the Department of Veterans' Services, Nee has overseen a number of new initiatives to increase access to services available for veterans, including the over 30,000 returning Massachusetts veterans from the Global War on Terror. Nee oversaw the creation of the Statewide Advocacy for Veterans' Empowerment (SAVE) program, a first-in-the-nation initiative to support veterans and their families coping with the stresses of returning from war and assist them in obtaining veterans benefits and services. He also directed the team that has successfully competed for over $1 million in federal workforce development funds to train and place veterans in employment, and led new outreach efforts to homeless veterans and families, the Women's Veterans Network, and disabled veterans.

Then state Undersecretary of Veterans Services, Coleman Nee of Cohasset, right, addresses the flag at the opening of the Deer Hill assembly honoring veterans in November, along with Thomas Wigmore, Commander of the Sons of the American Legion.

Nee told the Statehouse News Service that the agency is "going to be 10 times more aggressive" to find permanent housing for 5,000 to 6,000 homeless veterans in Massachusetts.

"That's a big number, but it is by no means insurmountable," he said. "It's not only a noble goal. It's infinitely cheaper."

Nee will lead the agency as the country winds down its military presence in Iraq and debates its continued presence in Afghanistan.

"We'll see a ramp-up in veterans' services even after the conflicts end," he said.

Prior to his service with the Commonwealth, Nee has worked in the fields of public policy advocacy and corporate communications for over 20 years. He is a member of the American Legion's George H. Mealy Post 118 in Cohasset. In 2001 and 2006, Nee was an Executive Member of the Congressional Medal of Honor Society Convention Committee, which succeeded in bringing the society to Boston for its annual convention twice in five years.

Roof concerns at Osgood addressed snow)," Walsh said. The snow removal as Osgood began on Wednesday by a professional roofing contractor. It continued into Thursday, which necessitated school closing.

"It's a precaution. As soon as we're able to get students back into the building we will, but not until we know it is safe," Walsh said, adding the others roofs were still being monitored for safety.

Osgood parents got the word that the school would be closed via a Connect-Ed message on Wednesday night. Some parents were confused on Thursday morning when a message went out to all three schools notifying parents of a two-hour delay. Osgood Principal Janet Sheehan sent out another Connect-Ed message to clarify Osgood was still closed.

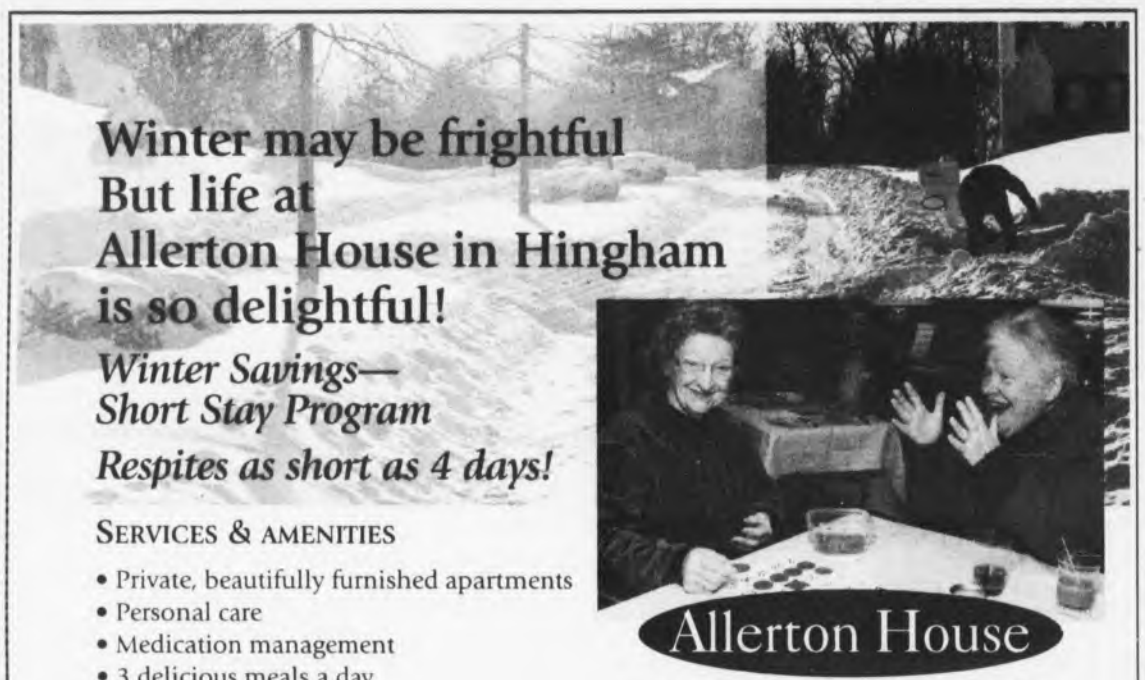
"It's a precaution. As soon as we're able to get students back into the building we will, but not until we know it is safe."
— Supt. of School Denise Walsh

Walsh said Cohasset Schools were pro-active in seeking advice on the roof situation and put them in a good place as flat roofs across the Commonwealth collapsed or were in danger of collapsing.

"We were really ahead of the game," Walsh said. She credited town facility manager Brian Adams with being on top of the situation. As the Mariner went to press on Thursday it was unclear whether the school would be open on Friday.

"All the staff, all the DPW crew, we really appreciate their hard work. All the buildings and parking lots have to be ready for 1500 students and staff," Walsh said.

Deliberation on how to handle school on a snowy day is not an easy, or scientific, process, Walsh said.



There is constant monitoring of the forecasts leading up to the storm. She begins speaking with other superintendents in the area around 4a.m. and communicates with the DPW superintendent and Adams.

"I'm talking to them long before making a decision," Walsh said. "It's not so much a science, because science implies a formula. There are ingredients and you try to get as much information as you can and make the best decision from that."

Cohasset Schools have had four snow days so far this year. There are five snow days built into the school calendar and Massachusetts schools are required to have 180 schools days.

"At this point we're going to think like the groundhog," Walsh said. The famous groundhog, Punxsutawney Phil, did not see his shadow this year, which is supposed to indicate spring is coming early. "Spring is right around the corner."

Alas, more snow is predicted for this Saturday.

BRIEFLY

Snow and ice deficit

Like all the towns across Massachusetts, Cohasset has entered the time of the year when the snow and ice removal budget enters deficit spending. Town Meeting allocated $125,000 for snow and ice removal this fiscal year. An amount that may have covered snow removal in a mild winter. As all residents know that has not been the case. The DPW entered deficit spending before last week's storm dumped about 10 inches on the area.

Last week's snow removal cost the town upwards of $30,000, including overtime, contractors, salt and sand. Figures on this week's (Tuesday-Wednesday-Thursday) storm were not available.

The Board of Selectmen approved deficit spending in this line item on Monday night. The Advisory Committee also has to approve the deficit spending. Under Massachusetts General Law, the snow and ice line item is allowed to run a deficit.

Selectmen vice chair Ted Carr commended the DPW and its contractors for doing a great job cleaning up after each storm.

Snow banks pile up

It's not breaking news, but there has been a lot of snow over the past few weeks. With the proliferation of snow — and lack of mild days to melt it — snow has been piling up at intersections creating a dangerous situation for vehicles and pedestrians.

"There are a lot of blind spots out there," said Fire Chief Robert Silvia at the Selectmen's meeting Tuesday night.

While he urged caution from drivers at these intersections, he also urged drivers to be especially aware of people and pets crossing streets or coming out of driveways.

"Use practical sense and just slow down and be careful," Silvia said. "Soon the sun will come out and the snow will melt and we can get back to regular operation until then if everyone could be a little more careful."

Fire hydrant help

Fire hydrants should always be accessible.

A clearly visible, accessible fire hydrant can save a home — or even a life.

If a fire hydrant is lost or buried in snow, firefighters can lose valuable time trying to locate it when they first arrive at a fire, said Fire Chief Robert Silvia.

The fire department has dispatched its officers to dig out the hydrants over the last week and got to about two-thirds of them, but then they got buried once again in this week's storm. Silvia said some of the hydrants are so buried they need some assistance from DPW.

For those hydrants not so severely buried, they are asking residents to help out and keep the town safe for everyone.

"Any assistance is greatly appreciated and increases the safety of your neighborhood," Silvia said.

Here are some simple steps to follow:

- Know the location of all fire hydrants in your neighborhood.
- Shovel out these fire hydrants each time you shovel your stairs, walks or driveways.
- Clear away any snow and ice in the area surrounding these fire hydrants.
- Shovel out these fire hydrants as often as necessary to keep them visible and accessible during heavy or prolonged snowfall.

Two sisters to visit Haitian orphanage in March

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

When Danielle and Taylor Frederick arrived in Port-au-Prince, Haiti last June they weren't sure what to expect.

Yet, by the time they left, their lives had been changed.

The Frederick sisters, Danielle, 17, and Taylor, 13, traveled to Haiti in the wake of the January 2010 earthquake, one of the most devastating natural disasters in recent history. They, along with their mother, Michelle Cayer, and grandfather, volunteered with Global Orphan Project and spent time in an orphanage 15 miles outside of Port-au-Prince.

"We had no clue what we were getting into," said Danielle, a junior at Milton Academy. But, the experience has stayed with them and both have developed a commitment to the Haitian orphans they met and befriended.

Taylor returned to Haiti with her mother this past November and both Frederick girls will return (with their mother and grandparents) in March.

"(The experience helped me) realize how lucky we are to have everything," Taylor said. Taylor is an eighth-grader at Cohasset Middle School.

The proximity of Haiti — only a two-hour flight from Miami — coupled with the stark differences in quality of life was a profound comparison. The experience made them both realize there was a vast world beyond Massachusetts and beyond the U.S.

"We're so close, but Haiti is so different from where we are," Danielle said. "There's not a day that goes by that I don't think about the kids there."

The Global Orphan Project orphanage houses about 80 children who have no other means of care. There are newborn babies right up to 17-year-olds. The orphanage existed before the earthquake, but it has grown in numbers since the disaster last January, the sisters said.

While in Haiti the teenagers' main job was to play with the kids. They organized activities, arts and crafts, games and even a carnival event on their final day.

"The kids' basic needs are met already. Our main job was to love the kids. They love getting hugged and having their picture taken," Danielle said.

"We're so close, but Haiti is so different from where we are. There's not a day that goes by that I don't think about the kids there."

Michelle Cayer has traveled to Haiti twice to volunteer with the Global Orphanage Project. Here she is pictured surrounded by Haitian children.

The Frederick sisters, Danielle and Taylor, brought donations of uniforms from Cohasset youth soccer to give to the orphans. The pair is preparing to return to Haiti in March.

Danielle Frederick, 17, is a volunteer with the Global Orphan Project, which houses more than 50 orphans in Haiti. She, her sister, her mother and grandparents will travel to Haiti again in March. They are currently collecting donations to bring along.

In the short visit the sisters formed strong bonds with the children. When Taylor returned from the trip she made her mother promise they would go back before the end of 2010. So, they did.

"I love being there and seeing all the kids. I miss them and feel guilty being here while they are there," Taylor said.

While in Haiti they also saw some of the hard circumstances so many Haitians are living with. They saw the juxtaposition of the Presidential palace across the street from a burgeoning tent city. They saw orphanages (at neighboring orphanages) with children who were malnourished and sick. Some of the kids were sleeping on little more than a plywood board.

"You realize what these kids have seen and they are so young," Danielle said. Despite the hardships, the sisters said, the kids are always smiling, laughing and playing.

"Given what they have been through they are resilient. It's amazing how much they have been able to overcome," Danielle said.

As they readied for their first trip last year, the teenagers said they received strong support from the Cohasset community to help in their efforts.

"So many kids came out of nowhere wanting to help," Danielle said. She made regular announcement about her upcoming trip at her school, Milton Academy. Her classmates responded by bringing in bags of clothing to donate. With the help from their network of friends they were able to each bring four checked suitcases of clothing donations.

When Taylor and her mother headed to Haiti in November they went with hundreds of school supplies.

For their upcoming trip in March they are collecting new or gently used summer clothes (they can't take any winter clothes), lotion, games/activities for multiple children (jump rope, balls), and Crocs.

The sisters know how much impact their commitment to Haiti and this orphanage could be.

"It's important for everyone to know someone still cares and still remembers them and wants to go back," Danielle said.

"Doing this has changed my life forever," Taylor said.

Both young women see themselves making regular trips to Haiti for the foreseeable future. To raise money for their upcoming trip, necklaces and bracelets are on sale at Hernan's Salon in the village.

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

LOVE-LY MONTH

Hello Cohasset and welcome to the month of February, the month of LOVE! I am hoping that everyone is doing ok and dealing with all of this snow we have had. It has been a lot and for me, it always puts me back into reality a bit when Mother Nature strikes and shows us that no matter what, we are not in control! From here on in, the days are getting a bit longer each day and that old groundhog did not see his shadow this past Tuesday and according to folklore, that means and early Spring. Hmmmm, we will see about that.

'Chasing Away the Winter Blues'

Winter stood still for one night this weekend when South Shore Conservatory hosted its annual Chase Away the Winter Blues fundraising event. Several hundred partygoers flocked to the Conservatory's Hingham campus amongst snow banks and freezing temperatures to escape the chill of winter and enter into the education facility transformed into a 4-venue nightclub style celebration of the arts.

Valets manned the entrance warmed by chimneas and twinkling lights as guests were whisked into the glow of silent auction, comfort food, cocktails and live music until after midnight. The Latin-theme evening radiated through a variety of musical entertainment, including a guitar bar, blues lounge, Copa Cabana nightclub and Cox Hall featuring South Shore Conservatory staff and faculty ensembles. Later into the night, The Heavyweights band entertained the dancing crowd as the main act.

Their largest fundraising event of the year, the Conservatory's scholarship and financial aid programs benefitted from a vast array of silent auction items including travel packages, precious gems, sports memorabilia, fine art, concert tickets.

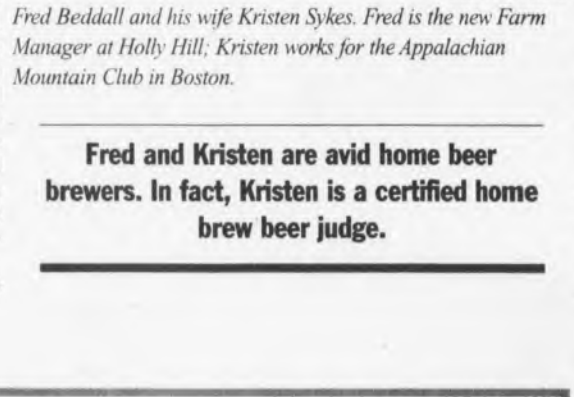
Holly Hill welcomes new farm manager

Holly Hill Farm is pleased to welcome Fred Beddall as the new farm manager. Fred and his wife Kristen Sykes moved here from Pennsylvania in January where Fred was the farm manager at Pennypack Farm in Horsham, Pa. Fred has been working on farms for over 10 years, from Montana to Scotland. He's had a variety of farming experience from small suburban gardens to cattle and sheep ranching.



Before farming, Fred spent a decade working in environmental politics at the Sierra Club where he met Kristen. Fred is an avid conservationist and spent time in college organizing a campus-wide recycling program at Stanford. Kristen works for the Appalachian Mountain Club in Boston as the newly appointed director of conservation strategies at the AMC. Kristen will be responsible for outreach and development to implement the 10-year strategic plan to achieve the AMC's land conservation mission.

Fred and Kristen are avid home beer brewers. In fact, Kristen is a certified home brew beer judge. Kristen has lived in many parts of the country including a short stint in Nashua, N.H. as a teenager. Fred is originally from Washington, D.C. and this is his first time living in New England.

Fred has been busy pouring over seed catalogues and preparing for this season that WILL come when the snow melts. Fred is particularly interested in welcoming members of the community to help on the farm this season.

"If you're fit enough to do yard work, you're fit enough to work in the fields ... the only way to learn about farming is to do it," said Fred who has had lots of fun working with volunteers in the past. There is something to do for people of all abilities and Fred's warm style is enthusiastic and fun.

If you are interested, or know a teenager in town who is looking for a meaningful community service opportunity, please contact Fred at 781-383-1455 or by email at farmmgrhollyhillfarm@verizon.net.

Students connect with police through Explorers skills in the process," Wigmore said.

The students are getting a hands-on experience and tutorial on the day-to-day life of a police officer and it seems the results are mutually beneficial.

"I really like how involved (the students) can get. It's fun to bring new kids in to the station to see what goes on there," said Aaron Bates, a senior at Cohasset High. He initially got involved with the police department through his community service class last year.

"The Chief said we're like the ambassadors (from the police department) to the high school, to our peers," Bates said. He hopes to spread the word and continue to get more students involved in the program.

Without a school resource officer, something that DeLuca would love to have if the budget allowed, the Explorers program enables the police department to establish a relationship and a presence with teenagers.

And, more so than a school resource officer, the Explorers program gives students a chance to develop a rapport with multiple officers as they go through the different sets of training.

"The firearms training will be done by one officer and the first-aid training will be done by another. The program enables a department-wide interaction so the kids get to know all of us," said Officer Hartnett, who serves as the police liaison to the Explorer Post 383 (named for Cohasset's telephone exchange).

Once the ice is broken the kids ask the officers all sorts of questions.

"The kids do ask a lot of questions and it makes me realize how little they know about what we do," Hartnett said. In other scenarios the students might be intimidated by the uniform and the gun, "we want to break down that barrier."

Some students' only interaction with the police maybe a speeding ticket or an instance of underage drinking, part of the program's goal is to show the students other aspects of policing.

"We want to bring back the community policing approach as much as possible and get the kids involved first hand," Hartnett said.

Hartnett has also worked to develop a connection between the Explorers and the senior community. Harnett also serves as the liaison to the elder affairs department. The Explorer students have been keeping busy shoveling driveways and walkways to ensure seniors can get in and out of their homes safely.

"The benefit is the simple fact is they are going to be helping in the community. Our primary goal is to assist seniors and the community in general and give these kids an education and background in law enforcement," Murphy said.

OPINION

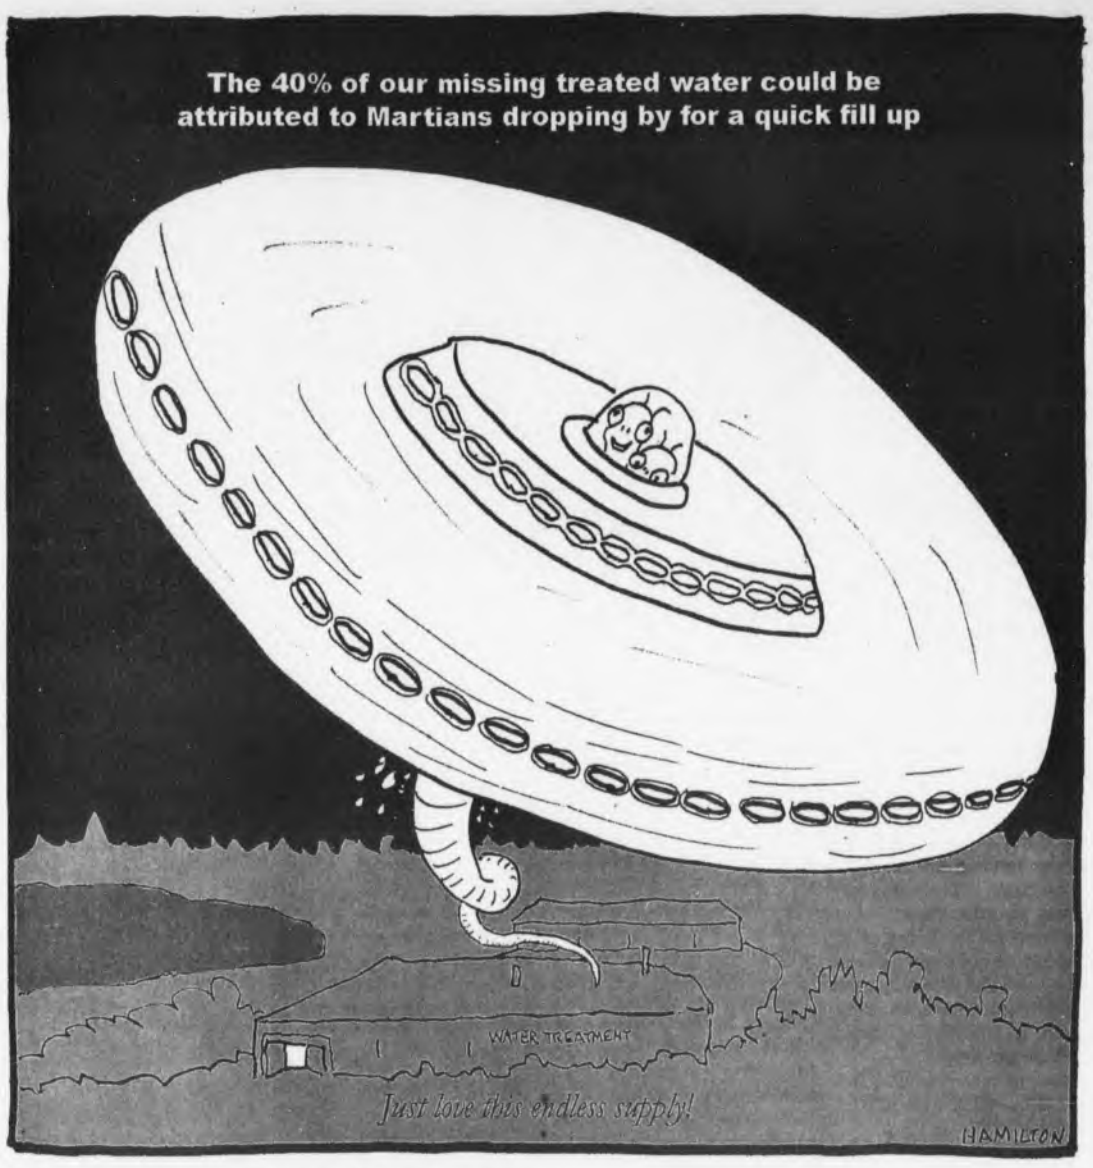
Driving in winter conditions

On Monday, as we were making a right-hand turn into the Dunkin Donuts in Cohasset on King Street (Route 3A), a woman was pulling out in front of us by trying to make a left onto 3A while eating a bagel sandwich. She was making the left-turn before 9:30 a.m., ignoring the sign that states left turns from 7:30 a.m. to 9:30 a.m. are prohibited. She was trying to accomplish the task with a bagel sandwich in one hand and without concern for the large snow banks on either side of the driveway that limited visibility. Why didn't she eat her sandwich while in the parking lot, or better yet, inside the restaurant? Why would anyone want to make a left turn onto 3A from that terrible spot with six-foot high snow banks blocking the view to oncoming traffic?

Further along during our commute to the Cohasset Mariner office in downtown Hingham that same morning, as we turned from Winter Street in Hingham onto Main Street to head to Hingham Square, a young man in an SUV was approaching on Main Street without looking at the road at all. It was as if his SUV was on autopilot! We would bet he was texting as his eyes were focused downward and not on the snow-covered road ahead. Why didn't he just pull over to compose and send his text message on his cell phone or Blackberry?

Then to top it off a minute later a man in a small dark-colored Mercedes, which was tailgating us on Main Street in downtown Hingham — literally inches from our bumper — passed us on the right in front of Old Derby where cars are usually parked. We were going about 20 mph due to the snowy conditions. What was his hurry to get to the next stop sign?



In addition to these incidents – we have noticed numerous "traveling igloos" — that are out on the roadways. We understand not everyone has a garage and clearing off snow from the car, SUV or pickup truck has become time consuming and painful – but the alternative of limited visibility and flying snow and ice could be so much worse.

Do what is going on out there? Have we lost our collective minds?

We implore all motorists to please take their time during these wintry conditions. Go slowly and put away the cell phone. Do not eat or drink while driving. Do not drink alcohol and drive. Clear off your car. Please do not tailgate the driver in front of you. Try to understand the slow-moving driver in front of you is concerned for his or her safety and is traveling slowly due to the conditions.

Please share your nightmare driving stories with editor Mary Ford at: mford@cnc.com

By sharing and getting the word out, perhaps we can influence some of our fellow motorists to change their risky behavior.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Teacher salaries

TO THE EDITOR:

I was interested to read that the School Committee wants to pay the new superintendent a salary in the range of the top 10 superintendent salaries in the state, in order to insure that the Cohasset Public Schools are among the top 10 schools in the state. I agree with this line of reasoning and assume that the School Committee will again follow it when next negotiating a contract with the teachers. It will be great to see our teachers also earning top 10 salaries that reflect the high degree of student success and the overall superiority quality of our schools.

R.E. tax payments

TO THE EDITOR:

Let's hope that most of us realize that our town needs monies to keep us in business. It's just like any store, contractor or office of any kind has to have payments when due.

Now we find a little glitch in the Water Department scenario — but we know we owe taxes on a certain date — we should pay on time.

Those of us that especially demand the best services, including schools, DPW, etc., you know who you are, should not wait for formal billing before you pay!

Blood drive takes place today (Feb. 4)

A Red Cross Blood Drive will be held on Friday, Feb. 4, at St. Anthony's Parish Hall, 10 Summer St., between the hours of 1:30 and 6:30 p.m. Childcare is available while you donate between 3: to 5 pm. At this time, donations of all blood types are needed to meet the needs of patients in local hospitals as well as those throughout New England.

In order to give blood, potential donors must be at least 16 years of age, weigh at least 110 pounds and be in good health. Most medications and medical conditions do not prohibit a person from being a blood donor. Donors can give blood safely every eight weeks. To make an appointment to donate at this Blood Drive or if you have questions, call Kevin or Ann O'Connor at 781-383-1290. If you cannot make it to this Cohasset Blood Drive on Feb. 4, you can go on the web at the site address above for a sampling of other upcoming blood drives in the area.

Town capital investment fund proposed

COMMENTARY

PAUL SCHUBERT

Leaky roofs in town buildings, renovation of present buildings and upgrading technology could be smoothly executed with less acute impact on a year-to-year budget.

Fiscally, the past two years have challenged the town finances. Historically, town revenues locally collected and that received from the Federal government and the Commonwealth are always subject to some variation. The economics in the past two years dramatically shifted the funding sources as local and non-local sources waned with the economy. Unexpected costs in various departments also play into the ability to fund other departments. Due to several factors concern is present for an inability to pay for adequate town services.

A question that I would ask the town is what level of services it is willing to fund. Public safety, education, town administration including general infrastructure are the leading costs for the town. Cohasset has a large portion of the cost on local real estate taxes. The town has some, although not a dramatic portion from commercial tax revenues. So when the federal and commonwealth funding decreases the burden for the town cost are on the local levies. Many municipalities and states have either capital reserves or as in the Commonwealth, The Rainy Day Fund. These are strategic reserves that can be accessed when either revenue falls or simply leveling the cost for capital expenses over time. Many municipalities have these funds.

I propose that the town construct a capital investment fund for needed capital expenses, such as vehicles, infrastructure and technology renewal. I would use current models that use one-half of one percent of the total tax revenue to be placed in a capital expense fund. This could be accessed for new vehicles for the town the schools and for technology renewal of computer and internet technology that by interfacing with all departments will help prevent problems of accounting, accountability and execution of needed projects for the town. With a $37,811,657 budget for 2010, this would be a starting value of $189,058 if enacted. Over time the available funds could cushion the capital expenses that the town encounters. Leaky roofs in town buildings, renovation of present buildings and upgrading technology could be smoothly executed with less acute impact on a year-to-year budget. This method of investing in the town will benefit the residents of town by having a positive effect on future capital needs and allowing for less long-term borrowing.

Paul J. Schubert, M.D., lives at 155 Sohier Street.

How to talk to your doctor

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Write down your symptoms; if you can't, it should done by someone you depend upon. Then, call your doctor.

The GP – how to deal with your physician: It's generally accepted that modern man began his journey at the end of the last ice age along with the demise of the mammoth. The Neanderthal man crossbred with modern man, but was an earlier version, and even Oriental strains were later. The Piltdown fraud was an example of English thinking of the 1800s. It's not surprising that that each of us of us is very different; let alone out of the same melting pot.

Objective: First of all "do no harm" (Hippocrates). When one needs to see a doctor, the first person they go to is a primary care practitioner, however his diagnosis should only be considered preliminary.

Plan: Write down your symptoms; if you can't, it should done by someone you depend upon. Then, call your doctor. Ask for his early diagnosis. Consider his personality; has he properly diagnosed you before? What are his specialties? Do they match your symptoms? This information should prompt you to ask him, if necessary, to decide to request a medical specialist.

Most specialists receive patients through referrals from a family doctor. Sometimes it may be difficult to determine the type of specialist needed to diagnose a particular problem. For example, visual problems may be limited to abnormalities in the eye itself, but may be the result of a variety of causes, including diabetes, hardening of the arteries, a stroke or tumor in a part of the brain that controls vision. Get as much information as possible about your illness or similar symptoms in a family member.

Treatment setting: Baseline and post-treatment is conducted in a doctor's office or an emergency room. Medicine is the science and art of healing. It encompasses a variety of different health care practices and venues, both public and private, evolved to maintain and restore health by the prevention and treatment of illness.

What is done by whom: Modern scientific biomedical research, where results are testable and reproducible, began with discovery of the smallpox vaccine at the end of the 18th century inspired by inoculation earlier practiced in Asia. Discoveries about 1880 of disease transmission by bacteria were followed by discovery of antibiotics around 1900.

From Europe, Germany, Austria, New Zealand and Australia doctors like Joseph Lister, Francis Crick, Florence Nightingale and many others are considered important.

As science and technology developed, medicine became more reliant upon medications. Throughout history until the late 18th century, not only animal and plant products were used as medicine, but also human body parts and fluids.

Modern pharmacology allows drugs to target specific physiological processes to reduce side effects, and modern knowledge of human genetics influences some medicine while most genetic disorders have been identified, and the development of techniques in molecular biology influence medical technology and decision-making. Pharmacology originally developed from herbalism and many drugs are still derived from plants. Vaccines were discovered by Edward Jenner and Louis Pasteur.

The first antibiotic was discovered in 1908. Doctors observed that bacteria took up toxic dyes from human cells. The first major class of antibiotics was the sulfa drugs, derived by French chemists from dyes.

Contemporary medicine applies health science, biomedical research and medical technology to diagnose and treat injury and disease, typically through medication, surgery or other forms of therapy that come from a specialist.

Results: Depend on duration, type and degree of illness, success of therapy, skill of practitioner and will of the patient.

Conclusions: Though medical technology and clinical expertise are pivotal to contemporary medicine, face-to-face relief of actual suffering often derives from successful transfer from several sources, practitioners and experts.

Also, we continue to observe the effectiveness of the application of ordinary human feeling and compassion, known as bedside manner.

Piles of snow everywhere

FOR THE RECORD
Gregory Mathis

Not only is the snow annoying, it's causing a lot of dangerous situations for homeowners, pedestrians, motorists, and most everyone else.

Thankfully we've changed the calendar this week from January to February. While that hasn't stopped the snow from falling, it brings us a little closer to a point in time when all this snow will be a distant memory. That time might not come until June, but we are a month closer.

For now, though, we have piles of snow.

We have snow piled on roofs. And it's heavy snow, causing roofs to collapse and other structural damage to businesses and homes.

We have snow piled on sidewalks. Kids who walk to school or need to get to a bus stop are being forced to walk in the road.

We have snow piled in parking lots. Been to the mall or supermarket lately? Mountains of ugly, gray snow take up a good deal of the parking spaces.

We have snow piled so high in heavily traveled areas that it's nearly impossible to see if it's safe to pull out of a side road onto a busy roadway.

Not only is the snow annoying, it's causing a lot of dangerous situations for homeowners, pedestrians, motorists, and most everyone else. In Scituate this weekend, a family lost their beloved dog when she came bounding out between snow banks and a driver did not see her until it was too late.

We've run out of places to put the snow. Over the weekend there were front loaders and 18-wheelers at area shopping centers brought in to haul some of the snow away to free up parking spaces, but that's not an option for everyone. So the snow continues to pile up in dangerous ways.

Adding to the misery of the snow piles are potholes. All the snowplowing and frigid temperatures have done major damage to the roadways making a rough ride for motorists. Giant craters big enough to swallow a small sedan or at least take out its tires and knock it out of alignment are forming daily on highways and side streets all over the region.

Sections of Route 3 through the Plymouth area are so pockmarked with potholes motorists were weaving all over the highway to try to avoid them creating a dangerous commute. Heavily traveled side roads aren't much better. And department of public works crews can only do so much with all the snow we've been getting and the cold temperatures. Temporary fixes are very temporary and it's next to impossible to keep up with it.

Potholes are usually a springtime nuisance for us, so one can only wonder what the condition of the roads will be in another month or so as we get closer to spring.

One thing we do know is it will take most of the spring to melt the impressive mountains of snow piled up in shopping center and mall parking lots. If it's any consolation, at least we're another month closer.

Still no shellfishing

New designation has no practical effect

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

"This new classification has no direct effect on the harvesting or seeding of shellfish in the Town of Cohasset."
— Paul Pattison, shellfish constable

Although the state Division of Marine Fisheries declared an area off of the Cohasset coast suitable for shellfish growing and harvesting, Cohasset's shellfish constable Paul Pattison said the new designation has no practical effect.

In an article two weeks ago, the Mariner reported on the change in shellfish designation and that clarification was needed.

The section that is now open does not include any tideland. It is open ocean off the coast of Cohasset (roughly from Strawberry Point in Scituate [near the glades] to Black Rock Beach on the Cohasset/Hull line.) Yet, the section does not begin until approximately a quarter-mile off the coast of Cohasset.

Pattison sent a letter to the Board of Selectmen explaining the new classifications lack of impact.

"This new classification has no direct effect on the harvesting or seeding of shellfish in the Town of Cohasset. The present status is prohibited as it has been for 10 years or more, " said Pattison in the letter.

When reached on Tuesday morning Pattison said he was not surprised by the Division of Marine Fisheries classification.

"Just the way it was written unless you knew a bit more about the area it was confusing," Pattison said.

Cohasset used to have flourishing marine life and a healthy population of shellfish. Pattison recalled many people harvesting clams in Little Harbor, Cohasset Harbor, especially in the flats up the creek near the Cohasset Maritime Center, and near Whitehead Beach, which faces the harbor. Those areas have been closed to shellfishing for about a decade now.

Pattison said Cohasset is the only town he is aware of that is 100 percent closed for shellfishing due to pollution affecting our once vibrant marine life.

"If we continue to do what we're doing we will continue to get what we get," Pattison said.

Missing out on best meal in town

FOR ADULTS ONLY
Steve Bobo

You may have read in the Mariner that the townspeople are planning to build a new Senior Center for the citizens of Cohasset. Reports in various forms have been in the Mariner and the rest of the media for some time. It's all very well for the Town to be considering such a thing. It's certain that, if the goings on at the present Senior Center sharing space with the South Shore Community Center at 3 North Main Street were better known, the populace would respond with more alacrity, and the place would be loaded with adults every Tuesday through Thursday for lunch.

Clearly the best and least expensive meal in Town! It ranks with the meals by Joe Campbell at Atlantica who serves the 'Old Goats' the second and fourth Thursday every month, and in Hull, food served to the Chanticleers Wednesday mornings at 9 a.m. But the Senior Center cost is $2.50! The best chefs in Town compete regularly for the opportunity to provide a sumptuous luncheon meal, served hot from the modern kitchen at the Center. Anna Abbruzzese, generally known as one of the premier chefs in Cohasset, regularly visits the center with her delectable fare. Those coming regularly to the center and its kitchen are in awe of the meals. If the current effort were better known, the place would have more visitors than it could handle. It's a quandary why more of Cohasset's citizens don't take advantage of this opportunity to eat some of the finest lunches served in Cohasset! Imagine the opportunity for Cohasset's large aging population, which a new senior center could provide.

During the current fund raising drive, some representatives of the Town indicate several well funded public non profits are anticipated to contribute substantial financial support. Meanwhile, the search goes on for a leader versed in fund raising to coordinate the effort. Almost weekly, meetings are going on aimed at structuring the committees, for the purpose of implementing plans of the architect, the Director of Elder Affairs, and various volunteer groups in building a center.

In future weekly postings, the Mariner will keep you abreast of events at your new Senior Center. Articles will cover: the status of the plans as they mature; status of the fundraising; need for Volunteers; management, principals; background and qualifications, who is now telling who what to do, etc. Events, such as appearances at public forums, are also usually independently covered and generally reported truthfully and accurately in other articles.

Election season gets started

Town Clerk Douglas to retire

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The town election season is off to a running start. A half a dozen residents stopped by the Town Clerk's officer to pull papers this week.

Nomination papers became available on Tuesday. The town election will take place on Saturday, May 7.

The two incumbent candidates for selectmen, current chair Karen Quigley and four-term selectman Fred Koed, pulled papers on Tuesday morning.

Koed said it was, in part, the auditor's report on the water department that spurred him on to seek a fifth term.

"I took out nomination papers yesterday, given the serious fiscal and management problems Cohasset faces. We can't leave any stone unturned to find fixes to those problems to protect all the taxpayers of Cohasset," Koed said. "We need to put stronger protections in place so that things like audits, cost accounting, budgets, and planning mean something."

Koed said he felt a responsibility to help Cohasset find the solutions rationally, "we need to do better."

Quigley said being a selectman is not something done lightly, "The decisions I make affect the town and its residents. I told the voters I'd listen, I'd make the best decisions I can and that those decisions would always be in the best interests of the town. It hasn't always been easy but I've kept that promise."

In the recent financial crisis she was among those who called for the audit and restructuring of the water and sewer departments.

"The audit uncovered significant flaws in the way the town has been conducting its business. As for (restructuring), much remains to be done to implement reform. These are challenging yet exciting times in town government. I'm up to it. I hope the voters agree," Quigley said.

There will be some changes in the town clerk's office. Long-time Town Clerk Marion Douglas is stepping down from her post. A familiar face, assistant town clerk Carol St. Pierre, has pulled papers for run for the paid full-time position.

"I'm excited; I think I am up for the challenge," St. Pierre said. She has worked in the Town Clerk's office since 1997 and held the position of assistant town clerk since 1999.

Douglas has served as Town Clerk since 1992, but worked in various positions in the town since 1979. She worked as the assistant town clerk from 1987 to 1992.

"I'm excited for the next chapter," Douglas said. She hopes to volunteers, maybe find a part-time job, and spend time with her young grandsons.

"I've always lived in Cohasset and I love it here. I'll miss (being town clerk), but I think it's time," Douglas said. Her last day of service as town clerk will be the day of the town election, May 7.

Paul Ognibene, who lost his bid for School Committee last year by 37 votes, is putting his hat into the ring again.

"I was humbled by the overwhelming support and encouragement I received last year, both during and after the election. Our schools represent such an important part of our town, and as a father of two, I am committed to ensuring that Cohasset's schools are among the best in Massachusetts," Ognibene said in an e-mail.

There is one seat available on the School Committee; two-term member Alfred Slanetz is up for re-election.

Planning Board member Clark Brewer, who has been on the board for three years, is seeking election to a five-year seat.

Maria Osborne ran a write-in campaign to fill a one-year position on the Recreation Commission and now she has pulled papers to run for a five-year term.

Town borrows $7.5 million

Money to be paid back in June

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

On Monday night, the Board of Selectmen signed a $7.5 million loan to see the town through the remainder of the fiscal year. With the tax bills delayed a few months the town needs a loan to be able to meet its financial obligations.

The water and sewer audit, which was presented to the town last week, delayed the town's 2011 tax rate certification. The town is now dealing with the results of the audit — a $265,000 current year deficit — and expects to have the tax rate certified after a special town meeting in March.

In the meantime, the town is facing a cash flow issue necessitating the loan, or revenue anticipation note. The number, $7.5 million, for the revenue anticipation note was based on a cash flow analysis done by the interim town accountant Eric Kinsherf.

Steve Lombard, interim town manager, said the town expects to spend about $15 million before the end of fiscal year (June 30, 2011). A complete cash flow chart of anticipated revenues and expenditures for the remainder of the year was developed to determine how much cash the town needs.

The $7.5 million is a little more than a quarter of the town's anticipated tax levy revenues in fiscal 2011.

"We may not use all that and be able to save on interest payments," said Lombard. Some residents have been paying their taxes voluntarily, which will lessen the need for the loan. A double tax bill, including two quarters, is expected to go out sometime before May 1.

Town officials took the town's low interest rate on the loan, about one percent, as a sign that the town's financial situation is still viewed positively.

"It's a good sign that with everything that's gone on it has not negatively impacted the town," said Selectmen chair Karen Quigley.

Lombard said the town's forthrightness in dealing with the water department, the anticipated deficit, and overall financial condition of the town reflected positively.

"(The low rate) definitely indicates confidence. The people that buy these notes are confident the town will pay it back," Lombard said. "Having the audit done shows our commitment to try to correct things done in the past and move forward."

The town will pay back the loan by June 17, 2011.

The Selectmen voted unanimously to sign the revenue anticipation note.

Wind turbine deliberation postponed

On Tuesday afternoon, the planning board chair Al Moore decided to once again postpone the scheduled deliberation of the Turkey Hill wind turbine project due to a snowstorm.

The anticipated public hearing on 100 Pond St. to seek a change to the residential cluster special permit was also proposed.

An e-mail sent out by Planning Board administrator Jo-Ann Pilczak apologized for yet another postponement, "it seems better to err on the side of safety."

Town counsel and the planning board's consulting engineer, both people the planning board would like to have present during deliberation and the public hearing, have to travel a distance to get to (and from) the meeting.

On Wednesday, February 9 the turbine deliberation is scheduled for 7:30p.m. and 100 Pond St. public hearing is scheduled for 8:30p.m.

The planning board has closed the public hearings on the Trustees of Reservation's proposal for an 80-meter wind turbine on the Cohasset side of Turkey Hill.

The Trustees of Reservations is a non-profit group dedicated to the preservation of open space. They maintain for the enjoyment of all over 100 properties across Massachusetts. Their local properties include World's End in Hingham, Whitney-Thayer Woods in Cohasset and Turkey Hill/Weir River Farm in Cohasset and Hingham.

Very little opposition to the project came from Cohasset residents – the nearest Cohasset residential building is Golden Living Center off Route 3A – but, there were widespread concerns expressed by Hingham residents, particularly in the Turkey Hill neighborhood.

Over the course of several public hearings items like noise, shadow flicker, visual impacts, ice throw/ice drop were discussed.

This is the third time the planning board has postponed the turbine deliberation due to a snowstorm.

Cat Dam heads to Conservation Commission

previously submitted NOI.

The NOI includes an environmental data, a proposal for operation and maintenance and oversight going forward.

More than 25 families have closely followed the issue. Most reside in the area surrounding inner Little Harbor — Nichols Road, Atlantic Avenue, and Jerusalem Road. Cat Dam is a tidal gate on Nichols Road that limits the flow of water for inner Little Harbor.

Although the Conservation Commission has a number of public hearings on the Cat Dam NOI submitted by the town this past fall, the process beginning next week is a fresh start.

"We're starting all over. We're taking everything in as evidence as if it is brand new, even though (this issue) has a long history," said David Farrag, chair of the Conservation Commission.

Farrag expects there to be plenty of questions from the board and plenty of comments from the audience. State agencies, like Coastal Zone Management and the Department of Environmental Protection, may weigh in on the application by sending a representative or submitting something in writing.

Farrag said the Conservation Commission has a lot of "leeway in conditioning" the NOI. If they disagree with something in the operation and maintenance schedule, they have the authority to change it. An order of conditions will be developed at the close of the public hearing process. The order of conditions is appeal-able to the Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) or by legal action, Farrag said.

The NOI application comes from the town and it is still unclear if there is an expert — an engineer — to present the report to the Conservation Commission.

Selectmen chair Karen Quigley said on Tuesday there was not an engineer scheduled to present the report.

With the original NOI, done by CLE Engineering, the presentation of the NOI to the Conservation Commission was included in the contract. Town Meeting appropriated $17,000 for the development of that report in 2008.

Now that the Selectmen have voted to apply with a different NOI developed by Lucas Engineering and Harbor Engineering and paid for by a group of residents, they would need to assume the cost of the presentation.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE: Beacon Hill Roll Call records the votes of local representatives' votes on three roll calls from sessions during the week of January 17-21. There were no roll calls in the House or Senate last week.

MAKE IT HARDER TO SHIP BILLS OFF TO STUDY COMMITTEES (H 2011)

House 31-124, voted strictly along party lines and rejected a Republican-sponsored rule requiring a two-thirds vote to ship proposed amendments off to a study committee unless the sponsor of the original amendment agrees with conducting a study.

The rule is designed to stop what Republicans describe as successful attempts by Speaker Robert DeLeo and his Democratic leadership team to prevent Democratic members, particularly in an election year, from having to vote directly against GOP proposals to reduce taxes.

Here's an example of how it works: The Republicans offer a proposal to reduce the sales tax from 6.25 percent back to 5 percent. If the Democratic leadership does nothing, there would be a roll call vote directly on the tax reduction. Most Democrats would vote against the reduction and then would be open to charges of being in favor of higher taxes.

Instead, a Democratic member offers a "delaying" amendment that would prohibit the tax reduction from taking effect until the Department of Revenue studies its economic impact.

Under House rules, the amendment to study and delay the tax cut is voted upon first. If it passes, which it always does, no other amendments can be introduced and the original proposal that would simply cut the tax is dead without ever having a direct vote on it. Republicans say the studies are a sham because they are never done.

They say this is all pre-planned by the Democratic leadership, that the Speaker at the podium calls upon a representative who is loyal to him and the member proposes the delay and study. Even if a Republican member is waving his or her hand and shouting to be recognized, he or she will not be called upon because he or she would not propose the delay and study.

Supporters of the Republican-proposed rule said this Democratic ploy is used to confuse the voters. They argued that the new rule would at least give supporters of tax reduction amendments a better opportunity to successfully force a vote directly on the tax cuts.

Opponents of the rule said the current system has worked fine. They argued raising the bar to a two-thirds majority is a slippery slope that will lead to proposals to require a two-thirds vote for all kinds of legislation.

(A "Yes" vote is for the rule requiring a two-thirds vote. A "No" vote is against the rule.) N

PUT HOUSE COMMITTEE ROLL CALLS ON WEBSITE (H 2011)

House 31-124, voted strictly along party lines and rejected a Republican-sponsored rule that would require House committee votes be posted on the Legislature's website. The current rule is vague and requires committee votes to become "a public record and be available to the public." There was no debate on the proposal.

A similar proposed rule that applied to joint House and Senate committees was rejected a couple of weeks ago.

During that debate, supporters of the new rule said this would simply give the public quick and easy access to the committee votes of their legislators. They noted under current rules, a person has to come to Boston during regular business hours in order to obtain this information.

Some opponents of the new rule said the current process of allowing a person to come to the Statehouse to get these roll calls is sufficient and has worked well for years. Some said the idea is a good one but the website is not yet ready technologically to implement this system. Others said the posting would be confusing.

(A "Yes" vote is for the new rule requiring that House committee votes be posted on the Legislature's website. A "No" vote is against the requirement.) N

ABOLISH SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE POSITION (H 2011)

House 32-130, voted mostly along party lines and rejected a GOP-sponsored rules change that would abolish the position of Speaker protempore created by former Speaker Sal DiMasi in 2005.

Supporters of abolishing the position said it is an unnecessary job with few responsibilities but an additional $15,000 stipend each year. They noted the position was created by DiMasi to shield him from his former majority leader, Rep. John Rogers, with whom relations were strained.

Opponents of abolishing the position said it is an important part of the Speaker's leadership team.

(A "Yes" vote is for abolishing the position. A "No" vote is against abolishing it.) N

ALSO UP ON BEACON HILL

PATRICK PROPOSES $30.5 BILLION FISCAL 2012 STATE BUDGET - Gov. Deval Patrick took center stage on Beacon Hill last week when he fired the first shot in the long battle over the state budget for fiscal year 2012 that begins on July 1. He proposed a $30.5 billion state budget, $1.7 billion more than last year's $29.4 billion budget, which he signed. However, administration officials estimate that when all is said and done, fiscal 2011 spending will climb to $31.1 billion and Patrick's $30.5 billion proposal will actually be some $570 million less than last year's actual spending.

The plan includes a 2 percent reduction in the administrative budgets of the state's six constitutional officers, a cut of 900 state jobs, elimination of two state prisons, cuts of $65 million in local aid to cities and towns, $23 million for emergency homeless shelters, $16.4 million for mental health hospitals and $6.6 million for group care services at the Department of Children and Families.

The measure also includes a $2.50 to $2.70 tax on auto insurance policies that would fund a new class of State Police cadets; and an expansion of the state's bottle bill to cover more containers and designed to raise $20 million.

The House will hold hearings on the governor's package and then draft its own version that will be debated and amended on the House floor. The Senate will follow suit with its own draft and a House-Senate conference committee will eventually craft a plan that will be presented to the House and Senate for consideration and then sent to the governor.

Rosmarie Engel-Conn reads from her memoirs drawn from her experiences as a teenager during and after World War II.

The Dog

By Rosmarie Engel-Conn
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Series of memoirs

Over the past year, the Mariner has occasionally published memoirs from Cohasset resident Rosmarie Engel-Conn. The 84-year-old German native has written down some of her most vivid memories and experiences as a teenager during World War II.

She lived under Adolf Hitler's rule, worked in an ammunitions factory as part of mandated service to the country, narrowly survived the bombing of Dresden, and escaped harm when the Russian army marched into her village just outside of Wittenburg.

She also has written memoirs of her life after WWII and experiences that shaped her life.

To read all her memoirs so far published, visit www.wickedlocal.com/cohasset.

In the early summer of 1956, life in my home country Germany was still overshadowed by the lost war. The lifestyle was simple, especially for those who had fled the eastern parts of Germany, which were now possessed and ruled by either Russia or Poland. Millions of displaced people had to overcome many problems, to build a new life for themselves in a strange, new surrounding, which was not always easy.

My family belonged to those who had fled the Russian Communist occupation in Saxony. We had made the difficult decision, despite loosing property, house and many friends, and ended up in Düsseldorf/West Germany – then the so called US Zone. There, former friends had offered us shelter and help for the first hard times to come. Here we tried to integrate and be part of the life around us.

Naturally, there was not much entertainment, festivities or traveling at all.

Reading the newspaper one day, I spotted a little advertisement, which caught my interest. A farmer-bakery household in the not so distant countryside offered room and board for a 14-day summer vacation. Even a pick up by bus was included in the offer! The price was affordable and it sounded promising, to spend 14 summer days in the country, with good meals, in a farmers family. I was excited.

So, as a young recently married couple, my husband Ulrich and I, after some discussions, decided to take the offer – and eagerly we looked forward to the first vacation we would spend together.

On a bright, sunny morning, a small old bus picked us up and we were greeted by some friendly people sitting inside.

The drive was nearly three hours long, and I still remember my feeling of satisfaction. Smiling I looked out of the window, watching the entire passing beautiful sights of summer nature – approaching our destination with some expectation.

The bus finally stopped in front of a sturdy rural farmhouse, which would be our home for the next two weeks. We entered the house through a rich ornamented, some centuries old door. Inside, the wide dark rooms had low ceilings, covered with strong, wooden beams, and there were very small windows. Welcomed by the friendly farmer and his wife, we were lead to our sparsely furnished room, where a huge bed in the center was piled up with thick feather beds. How comfortable and inviting I thought!

Later the farmer's wife showed us around in the large cobblestone courtyard, which was centered by a water pump. Now we smelled the dung heap – steamy and stinky – in one distant corner. Then we entered a barn connected to the main house and inside a dark stable we were welcomed by the warm and smoky smell of animals, straw and hay. I counted six cows, which stared at us with tired interest.

In the back corner, wildly moving, was a sharp barking middle-sized dog.

He was fastened to the wall with a big linked, heavy iron chain. Shocked and full of fear we looked at him, how he, with an unfriendly look, bore his dangerous looking teeth to us visitors. His fur looked dirty and filthy, obviously untreated by human hands for a long time. More a beast than a normal behaving dog – this was his appearance.

And really, the farmer's wife, with serious expression on her face, warned us, never to come close to him – to avoid injuries or harm.

I asked "What is his name?" She looked at me, astonished about this question: "There is no name – it is the dog!" she answered firmly. I tried to glimpse in his round, dirty metal food bowl and discovered some bits of raw and cooked potato peels in it. Emotionally touched by recognizing the dog's strange situation, my feelings in this moment were divided, in one way I feared the beast-like animal. But on the other hand I felt a great sadness for a creature, living under these hard conditions. A creature neglected in a remote dark corner of a stable – not paid attention to at all – not even called by a name! The last point was the most disturbing one.

The next day, I awoke very early around 5 o'clock. Was it, because of the wonderful smell of fresh baked bread streaming through the wide open windows and filling the room? I laid still – this smell evoked such a good feeling of a peaceful protected simple life.

And we enjoyed the fresh, brown-crusty country bread later at breakfast and with all our meals during our stay in this farmhouse.

But I couldn't feel really happy or satisfied because there was always the dog in my thoughts. His poor life, day by day, fastened with a heavy iron-chain to the stable wall in a dark, dirty surrounding – mishandled.

After some hesitation I asked the farmer's wife. "Why is the dog always staying in the stable and never seen outdoors?" Astonished she looked at me, that I showed interest in the dog's situation and said. "His task is only, to draw the loaded cart with the full milk cans up the hill in the evening to the collection station in the village. This is it!" Wow! What a short, hard answer I got. Again in the evening I watched the "Dog" how he was fastened to the front of a middle-sized wooden cart. With strong effort he started to pull the fully loaded carriage forward on the uneven road, up the hill, where he disappeared.

Now it became clear to me that I couldn't enjoy anyone of the rich meals, served to us, anymore, thinking of the "Dog" in his misery, fed with the worst leftovers I had noticed in his bowl.

I started to select on my plates rich portions of meat, to bring them later, as secretly as possible, to "Dog."

When I tried, anxiously the first time, to throw the food from some distance to him, he unfortunately barked wildly – not knowing what happened or what to expect. But on the following days, when I entered the stable, he stood there in a position so full of expectation, tail waving. It was touching. The farmers, probably noticing the ongoing affair, didn't complain or forbid my action, and so, I continued and felt much better, day by day.

After one of our long walks through yellow fields, green meadows and resting in the beautiful shady German "wald" – forest, I made a decision – not knowing what the outcome would be.

I approached the farmer's wife and asked her if it would be possible to take "Dog" with us on our walks during the day. "He will enjoy it and it doesn't do anyone harm," I said, kind of sheepish. The woman looked at me, hesitating and not very pleased about the proposal. She warned again, that the dog could act dangerous. She said, "Why take him out anyway?" But I must have looked so demanding at her, that she agreed.

There was no leash. She fastened an old, long rope on his collar and there we stood in front of the house – my worried husband, I, with the dirty rope in my hand and "Dog, who looked at us in an innocent way, not knowing what to expect. And all three of us didn't know, was it the right decision I had made, or what could happen.

But I was determined to bring "Dog" for some hours a day out of his prison-like surrounding. We looked at each other, "Dog" and I, and he, very little and slow, started waving his tail, with an expectant glance in his eyes. We marched along and willingly he followed. But suddenly the situation changed. It was not me leading him on the rope anymore – it was "Dog" who decide to run, to walk, to stop, and to run again. I had to do my best to follow his actions and speed!

What a pleasure it was, what a wonderful feeling, to move along with "Dog" in the warm summer air! To bring him out of the dark stable in another way of life! Finally we sat down on a rural wooden bench, overlooking the peaceful, calm countryside for a well-earned rest and a snack. But then suddenly, I was moved to tears. "Dog" didn't sniff or stray around on the long rope – not even tried to grab his chance to escape an unloved and harsh treated life – no, he placed himself, heavy and shaggy, in all his dirty fur, down on my feet. He didn't look at me, but stared with such peaceful satisfaction in the same direction we did, enjoying the time of rest with us. I couldn't stop the tears which were now pouring down my face and slowly I started to glide my hand over his filthy fur. His gratefulness connected both of us in a wonderful way. It was an unforgettable moment in my life and probably in "Dogs" life also.

From then on the portions of food I took to him became even bigger and were so well accepted and our daily walking-trips became routine.

It was hard to say goodbye to the "dog without a name" in a little village in the German countryside – and bittersweet is the memory up to today, knowing, that "Dog" had to endure his harsh life again after our departure – but remembering the touching gratefulness for everything in his eyes.

Hurry up and wait

By William Wassersug
WWASSERS@CNC.COM

What looked like a busy week for Cohasset sports gave way to lots of waiting as more and more snow piled up over the week.

Still, with any luck the girls basketball team can finish the week with two games in hand.

Sunday, the Lady Skippers notched a 53-26 victory over Newburyport at home in a matinee to improve to 13-1.

Lindsey Davis led the charge with 16 points, including four three-pointers.

Anna Seraikas chipped in 12 and Carli Haggerty scored 11.

Rachel Fredey added six and Allie Farren scored five.

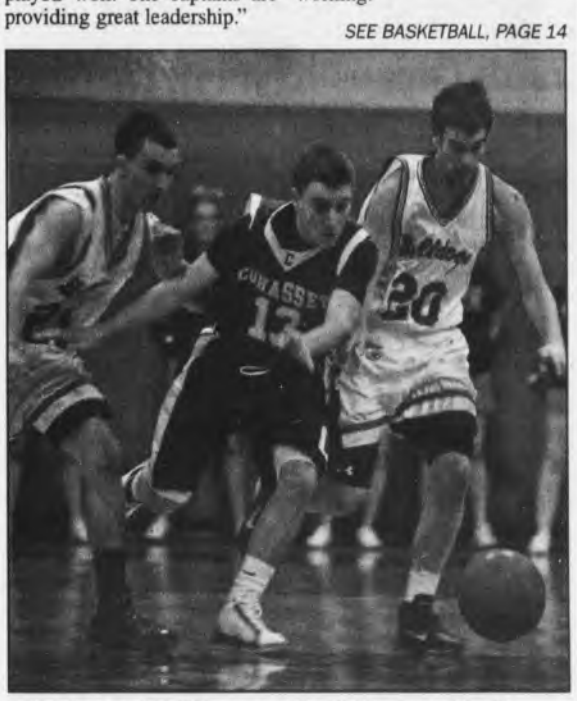
The first half was close, with Cohasset taking an 18-10 lead into the half.

Davis put the lead into double digits with a three-pointer on Cohasset's first possession and Cohasset went on a 10-2 run to up the lead to 28-12 with 4:43 left.

Cohasset kept the pressure on with a pair of threes in the next few minutes by Davis and Haggerty and Cohasset led 38-18.

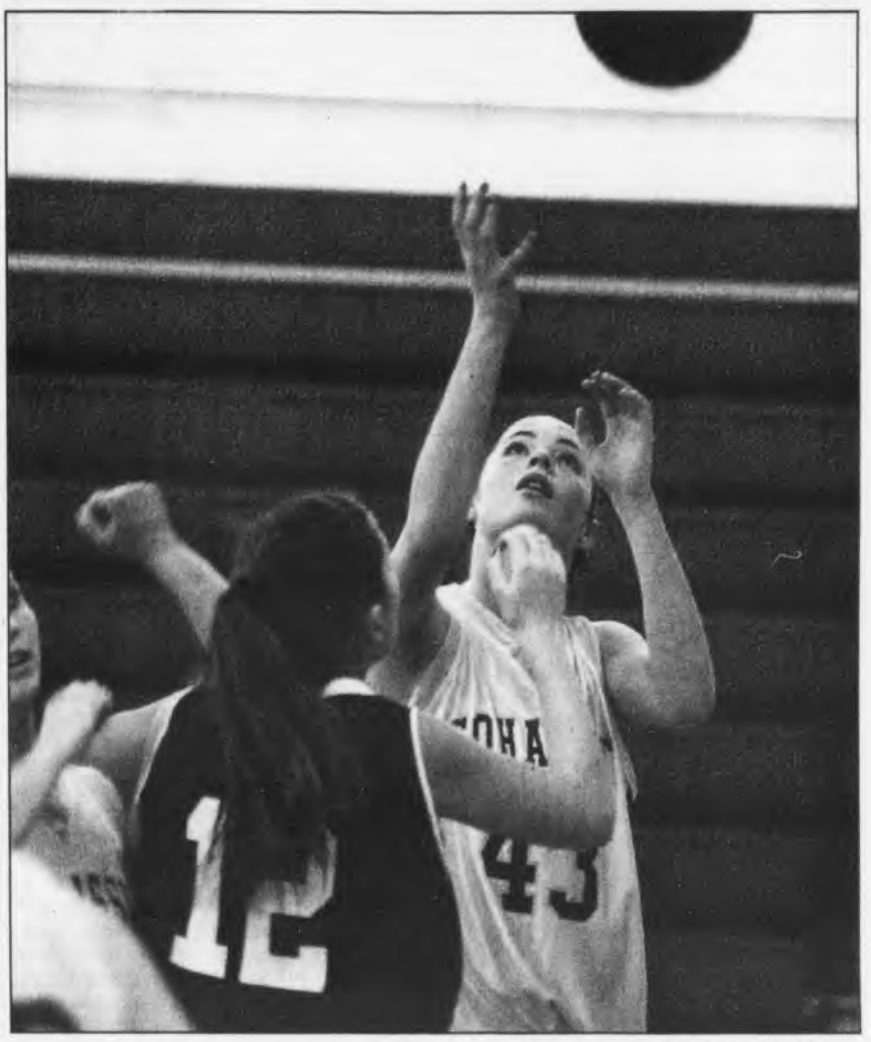
Farren closed the scoring with a three at the buzzer.

Like most nights for Cohasset, team play and defense were as or more important than the scoring.



"We're playing well," Cohasset coach John LeVangie said. "The girls are playing hard and playing focused. It's the whole team. The bench has played well. The captains are providing great leadership."

Against Newburyport, LeVangie was pleased with the defensive intensity.



"The pres worked well tonight," he said. "That's just work ethic."

Offensively, the long ball was working.

Cohasset's Kierce facing the next test

By William Wassersug
WWASSERS@CNC.COM

Cohasset's Chris Kierce had a pretty special run last year at F1 Boston Racing in Braintree.

Kierce won the triple crown in his division (2A) last year, winning the championship race at the end of the season, the point standings for the season and he set the season record for fastest lap time.

This year, Kierce is looking to up his game as he moves from the 2A Division into the 2A Elite Division, where he'll be racing drivers with more experience.

This is a big season for Kierce.

As he's turning 12 in March and his success continues, his family is thinking about buying Chris his own kart and possibly heading on the road toward a career in racing.

"I would love it," Kierce said after a Sunday morning race a few weekends back. "I love NASCAR more than any sport."

He enjoys the competition and more.

It doesn't hurt that many NASCAR drivers got their start in kart racing.

"When I race I love how it feels to go fast," he said. "I love it when I'm one someone's tail or passing, when I know I did a good job."

Kierce averaged 46 mph last year over 70 races.

In the 2A Elite Division, he knows things won't be easy right away.

"I hope to get into the top-six," said Kierce. "It's different. The kids in this group are more aggressive. They really try to pass. I'm not too aggressive. I want to pass, but I don't want penalties either. You lose everything you got with penalties."

Kierce's dad, Paul, likes the way the sport blends team concepts with individual performance.

"This is speed. It's racing," Paul said. "It's an individual sport like golf, where you're competing with others, but it's team oriented

Close loss for Cohasset/Norwell

By Ryan Wood
RWOOD@CNC.COM

The Cohasset/Norwell gymnastics team lost a close one to Hanover/Rockland in its most recent action, falling 124.85 to 122.65.

"The girls are having a pretty good season," co-head coach Ruthann Ardizzoni said. "We have won three and lost two. The two losses have been by a very small margin."

Against Hanover/Rockland, Sam Sprague placed first in the all-around with a score of 33.4. She won the beam with an 8.5, the bars with an 8.2, and the floor with an 8.60. Amber Silvia placed third in the all-around with a score of 31.6. She finished second on the bars (7.70) and third on the beam (7.9). Emily Kuhn and Melinda Dignam set personal bests on the uneven bars, Ardizzoni said.

Cohasset/Norwell takes on Marshfield, the only unbeaten team in the Cranberry League North Division, this week. Then on Saturday, the team heads to Somerset North Elementary School for the All-League Meet.

Cohasset's Kierce facing the next test

because everyone on the track has to work together to make sure they're not wiping each other out."

Paul feels Chris has a natural affinity for the sport.

"Chris notices idiosyncrasies of other drivers," he said. "He'll see what someone might to do and adjusts. He's always trying to improve. There are a lot of things you can do to improve."

The stats tell the story.

"When I first did 2A I finished seventh in my first race, then first," Chris said. "I thought it might take a season to catch up."

You've heard the rest of the numbers. He caught up, even after missing the first race of the season for a trip to NASCAR in New Hampshire.

In that season, he finished with the fastest lap 12 times in 33 races.

Paul said this season will be an indicator of where things will go.

"There are two directions you can go," Paul said. "There's NASCAR and Formula racing. Chris is will be 12 in March. If he gets his own kart, he can be in outdoor F1 New England, then in 13 he could be on a grand scale. F1 Boston has produced some of the best racers in the country. When you get to that level, you're on a bigger scale. The lifestyle is different. You travel a lot."

Chris wouldn't mind.

"It's something I'd like to do," he said of the travel. "It's something I hope I can do."

The outdoor racing is seasonal in this part of the country, but is extended in places like Florida and Arizona.

Kierce also plays basketball, and was on the court later in the day playing in a Cohasset Youth Basketball game during halftime of the Cohasset boys win over Hull.

"Basketball is fun," Chris said.

Chris started driving at the local go-kart track (Starland in Hanover) and was hooked.

"When I was little I saw cars and asked my dad if we could go," Chris said. "Then I saw the bar that showed how tall you had to be to drive and I had to ride with my dad. It was fine. Me and my sister (Ashley) were next to each other."

Chris said that the go-karts gave him the feel of speed similar to the F1.

"It feels really fast when you don't have a helmet on," he said. "It's different when there's no breeze."

Along with Ashley, Chris has two brothers, nine-year old Thomas and six-year old John Anthony.

John Anthony is a racing fan.

"He loves cars too," Paul said. "When we started racing we'd come and sit outside and watch. I hope he will race too."

One thing that is different about F1 than go-karts, aside from the speed and at least in Braintree, the indoor professional track, is the dedication.

To be able to race, drivers must go through a two-day school and when they're driving, they have uniforms for safety, including helmets.

F1 provides all the gear, including uniforms and helmets, but racers can get their own.

"I went through a two-day driving school on a Saturday and Sunday," Chris said. "When we started driving we went in a straight line and slowly around. I was nervous. To pass, you had to take a test. You had to know what all the flags are. Sunday was all racing."

After a time, Chris knew he was in it to stay and got his own driving uniform with a unique touch.

"The only ones that fit me were yellow," Chris said of the ones he wore. "I was in a school with three kids and they called me the yellow guy. When we bought one, I decided on yellow with black arms. My grandparents got a patch with our family coat of arms and they sewed it on."

Cohasset's Connor Green breaks New England swimming resident record

Connor Green, 14, of Cohasset set a 13-14 Boys 400-meter IM (individual medley) New England Swimming Resident Record with a swim time of 4.42.71, taking down Erik Vent's record of 4:44.87 from 1995. Connor was also a key member of the 13-14 boys Bluefish Swim Club relay team that broke a New England Swimming Long Course Resident Record in the 13-14 boys 400-meter medley relay with a time of 4:18.34.

Connor was one of 25 Bluefish Swim Club swimmers to qualify for and compete at the 2011 CeraVe Invitational held January 14-16, 2011 at Rutgers University, Piscataway, NJ, where several hundred swimmers from top teams throughout the Northeast competed.

In addition to the 400 IM and relay, Connor earned 5th place in the 200-meter backstroke (2:13.72) and 200-meter IM (2:15.04), 7th place in the 100-meter backstroke (1:02.33), 10th place in the 200-meter breaststroke (2:34.04), and 13th place in the 100-meter breaststroke (1:11.34). He also competed in the 100-, 200-, and 400-meter freestyle.

The Bluefish Swim Club is a USA Swimming member and a participant in New England Swimming. No matter the swimmer's age or ability, whether it be competing on its winning 235-member competitive swim team; participating in structured swim lessons for youngsters just learning to swim; or continuing a passion for swimming in the adult Master's program, the Bluefish Swim Club offers the right program for everyone at its Attleboro High School, Attleboro, MA; Wheaton College, Norton, MA; Cumberland High School, Cumberland, RI; and Raynham Athletic Club, Raynham, MA locations. The team's competitive program also has practices in Shrewsbury, MA, in addition to the other locations.

The Bluefish started in the 1970s. Since owners Chuck and Christie Batchelor bought the Bluefish in 2005, the team is frequently making national and international news. During his extensive coaching career, Chuck has trained more than 31 Olympic Trial qualifiers, 50 National qualifiers, 2008 Olympian Elizabeth Beisel, and nine swimmers who ranked in the top 100 in the world.

"We're capable of it," LeVangie said of the three-pointers. "Having a lead is a nice luxury."

LeVangie feels his team is on the right track.

"We're where we want to be. 13-1 is a good start," LeVangie said. "We still have a lot of work to do. The kids work hard. They focus. I'm pleased. This is another team from last year. They've established their own identity. Much of that comes from our senior leadership. We have great senior leadership."

The first time the Cohasset played Newburyport, Cohasset won by eight points.

"This was a good win for us," LeVangie said. "The first time we played it was an eight point game. This was a solid performance. The kids are improving. Sometimes it doesn't show up right away, but we've improved."

In their previous game, Cohasset beat East Bridgewater 44-28.

Cohasset is scheduled to host Carver tonight, while the boys will head to Carver.

The boys have had plenty of time to prepare for Carver.

Their last outing was an 89-66 win at East Bridgewater

Four players scored in double-figures at this road win for Cohasset (11-1, 9-1).

Sam Richardson led with 23 points in the win. Robert Jones added 17 points, Kyrel Jaundoo notched 15 points Shane Haggerty scored 10 points. Robbie Mahoney had 12 rebounds for the Skippers.

The boys were scheduled to play Harwich on Tuesday, but that game was postponed to Feb. 14 at home at 6:30 p.m.

Cohasset hosts Rockland on Tuesday night.

For Michele, one of the greatest advances in cancer care has been the one on the South Shore.

When Michele needed treatment for breast cancer, she was thankful that she could receive world-renowned care at Dana-Farber/Brigham and Women's Cancer Center in clinical affiliation with South Shore Hospital. And she had confidence knowing that our specialists, focused on cancer, were providing the expert care she needed. But she also found something more: how important it was to be treated in a place that not only cared for her cancer, but also for her life.

"It's a place filled with hope," said Michele. And having all the integrated services she needed close to home helped her maintain a sense of normalcy through her treatments. "With two small kids, I don't know how I would have managed otherwise," she explained. "Having this level of cancer care on the South Shore — it means everything to me."

Semi-formal was a big success!

LIFE AT CHS

NATALIE DIGNAM

...between the Waka-waka and Senora Jordan's own rendition of the "Dougie" (it's a dance... sort of), anyone who didn't go was only missing out!

It's finally the start of a new term at CHS, but between the snow-days and half-days, we haven't really started our new classes. The weather the past few weeks (a mix of snow, sleet, rain, ice, and probably some cats and dogs) has created an interesting situation in the student parking lot, where snow drifts have taken the place of parking spots and has led to a musical-chairs type parking situation.

But before I get ahead of myself, last week's Semi-Formal was a great success despite the late notice (students found out that the semi was actually going to take place as scheduled Friday afternoon). The ladies showed off some beautiful dresses, but sadly there weren't many boys in attendance. But between the Waka-waka and Senora Jordan's own rendition of the "Dougie" (it's a dance... sort of), anyone who didn't go was only missing out!

This week is CHS Superfan Week, which means that each student received a free ticket to any CHS sports event. Show some support at the girls' basketball game on Friday at 6:30 p.m. against Carver, or the boy's hockey game this Saturday at 8 p.m. in Weymouth. The free tickets are valid for postponed or makeup games as well. That's all for the week, enjoy the snow-days CHS!

Natalie Dignam is a senior at CHS. Her column appears weekly during the school year.

Kindergarten registration

Kindergarten registration for the 2011-2012 school year has begun. Registration is at the Osgood School daily from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Parents registering for kindergarten will be asked to indicate interest in full-day or half-day kindergarten at the time of registration, but they do not have to commit at this time. Parents are encouraged to register early to facilitate planning for programs. A birth certificate and proof of residency are required for kindergartners in order to register. Call the school office at 781-838-6117 for more information.

CAMP, SCHOOL AND ACTIVITIES DIRECTORY

TEN REASONS WHY YOUR CHILD NEEDS A SUMMER CAMP EXPERIENCE Part 1

By Bette Bussel, Executive Director, American Camp Association, New England

There's no doubt that summer camp can have a profound impact on a child's life. Kids get to sing silly songs, play funny games, swim in lakes, and tell spooky stories around a campfire; this is the image of camp that has been captured and memorialized in films, books, and television programs. The truth is there is much more to a camp experience then fun and games. For the last century and a half, experiential education in summer camp settings has played an integral role in children's overall development – cognitive, physical, and social-emotional. Here are the first five (of ten) reasons why your child shouldn't miss out on a unique growth experience at day or overnight camp--or both!

1. Reduced summer learning loss - Studies have shown that during summer vacation, students can lose the equivalent of up to three months of what they've learned during the school year. Experiential learning at summer camp (learning by doing) keeps a child's brain active, alert, and acquiring knowledge and skills.

2. Development of decision-making skills. Camp provides an excellent environment for your child to learn and practice individual and group decision-making. Interacting closely with a camp group creates opportunities to socialize and to navigate interactions with other children and adults; opportunities for building effective team skills—including conflict resolution skills—allow campers to prepare for college and future careers!

3. Increased physical activity from canoeing and hiking to soccer and tag, an on-going workout is a natural part of the day.

4. Direct experiences in nature and living much more closely to the Earth – Being outside is proven to reduce stress levels, improve mood, and simultaneously stimulate all of a child's senses.

5. Lasting intergenerational and diverse relationships – From peers to counselors, summer camp gives your child an opportunity to meet new people from a variety of age groups, providing them with positive role models and new friends.

SALOME'S STARS FOR RELEASE WEEK OF FEB. 14, 2011

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) St. Valentine's Day magic rules the entire week for romantic Rams and Ewes. Music, which is the food of love, is also strong. The weekend offers news both unexpected and anticipated.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) Your aspects favor the arts — which the Divine Bovine loves, loves, loves. Also, for those looking for romantic love, Cupid is available for requests. After all, his mother, Venus, rules your sign.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) Loving commitments continue to grow stronger. Ditto budding relationships. A recent move to help start up a new career-linked direction could soon begin to show signs of progress.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) Single Moon Children might be eager to take that proverbial chance on love. But your more serious side will feel better if you take things slowly and give your moonstruck self more time.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) It's a love fest for Leos and Leonas this week. Paired Cats might expect to be purr-fectly in sync. And with matchmaking friends, single Simbas searching for romance shouldn't have too far to look.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) More understanding on both sides can work miracles in restoring ailing relationships to health. Make the first move, and you'll be closer to your much-wanted reunion.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) Accept the fact that you are worthy of being loved, and you'll find proof in what is revealed to you over the course of the week. Also accept a compliment offered with great sincerity.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) Planning to take a new direction in life is exciting. And so is a new awareness of someone's special affection. Expect a slow and mostly steady development of the situation.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) Although you might still feel you weren't treated quite right in a recent matter, all that will work out in time. Meanwhile, enjoy the week's special qualities and potentials.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) Deciding not to give up on a troubling romantic situation helps start the healing process. Expect to find some valuable insight into yourself as things move along.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) The week is filled with positive potentials, but it's up to you to make the right choices. The advice of someone who truly cares for you and your well-being can be priceless.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) It's a good time to make yourself available to possibilities of the romantic kind. Already paired? Good. In that case, be sure to reassure that special person of your feelings.

Fun By The Numbers

Like puzzles? Then you'll love sudoku. This mind-bending puzzle will have you hooked from the moment you square off, so sharpen your pencil and put your sudoku savvy to the test!

Here's How It Works:

Sudoku puzzles are formatted as a 9x9 grid, broken down into nine 3x3 boxes. To solve a sudoku, the numbers 1 through 9 must fill each row, column and box. Each number can appear only once in each row, column and box. You can figure out the order in which the numbers will appear by using the numeric clues already provided in the boxes. The more numbers you name, the easier it gets to solve the puzzle!

In his comparative theological work, Fr. Clooney, professor at Harvard Divinity School and director of the Center for the Study of World Religions, has sought to bring together Hindu and Christian wisdom. From the Upanishads to Gandhi, Hinduism offers insights into nonviolence and its grounding in interiority and wisdom. In his talk Fr. Clooney will show how these Hindu traditions harmonize well with Christian teaching and practice, from Jesus to Dorothy Day, of the nonviolent way of life. He also suggests that learning itself can be re-imagined as a nonviolent activity, grounded in an openness of mind and heart that respects the particularities of both one's own and other's faith and experience

Lectures are free – donations welcome. The program will take place in the Conference Center at Glastonbury Abbey, 16 Hull St., Hingham. Reservations will not be taken. Seating is limited and on a first-come, first-served basis. For more information, visit the website at glastonburyabbey.org.

Dressed to the 'Nine'

SpeakEasy stages 'Nine'

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

Before making a name for herself as a Boston actress – with both stage and feature film credits – Maureen Keiller logged many hours singing in South Shore clubs, including the once very popular Pembroke watering hole, Hosea's.

"I haven't worked in a country music bar in a long time," explained Keiller from her home in Hull recently. "Those places were fun, of course, but it was always clear that people hadn't come just to listen to the band. They were there to eat, and to drink, and sometimes the entertainment was just an after-thought. I like theater much better. People who pay to see a show really pay attention to it."

Especially when Keiller is in the cast, as she is in the current SpeakEasy Stage Company production of the musical "Nine" – her first musical since 1999's "The Wild Party," also at SpeakEasy – at the Boston Center for the Arts.

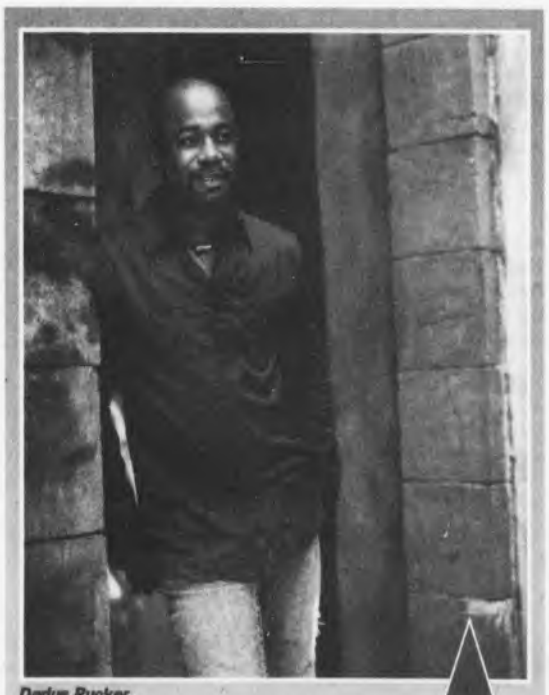
"It's been a wonderful year so far. I did Lyric Stage's 'The Life and Adventures of Nicholas Nickleby, Parts I & II' in repertory, which was a truly epic and amazing experience. It was Charles Dickens after all, and you really can't go wrong with Dickens. It also involved a big cast of some of the best actors around and we all got to spend four months together, which is an unusually long contract for Boston. I had about one week free between 'Nicholas Nickleby' and the start of rehearsals for 'Nine.' It has been a little overwhelming, but definitely worth it."

Based on Federico Fellini's classic film "8½," "Nine" is the all-time favorite musical of SpeakEasy's Producing Artistic Director Paul Daigneault, who is staging it in celebration of his company's 20th anniversary. The show, with music and lyrics by Maury Yeston and book by Arthur Kopit, first premiered on Broadway in 1982 and was revived eight years ago. It tells the story of film director Guido Contini, who is faced with both mid-life and marital crises just as he turns 40. Desperate to avert a nervous breakdown, Guido explores his past relationships – flaws and all – with the many women who have come through his life, all while trying to adjust to life as a mature adult. Keiller plays Guido's producer, Liliane LaFleur, a role that won a Tony Award for Liliane Montevecchi in the original production, a Tony nomination for Chita Rivera in the revival, and a critical drubbing for Dame Judi Dench in the ill-fated 2009 film adaptation.

"Liliane has a romantic soul and she wants things to be beautiful, but she is also more than willing to kick some butt to achieve her goals. She is definitely someone who means business. Guido is under contract to direct a movie musical, but he is stuck without ideas. Liliane will do whatever it takes to get results from Guido. She has great energy."



And some pretty spiffy costumes, too, according to Keiller, who can be seen in made-in-Massachusetts movies like "Fever Pitch" and "The Proposal."

"Chip Schoonmaker has designed some really great costumes for the women in this show and I feel very lucky to be able to wear them. They look just great on Eric Levenson's beautiful set, too."

Keiller is happy to extol what she sees as the many virtues of the SpeakEasy production, but she is quick to distance what is now on stage at the Boston Center for the Arts from the high-profile, Rob Marshall-directed feature that brought Sophia Loren back to the screen, but which failed to bring audiences to movie theaters.

"The movie is not at all like the stage version, which is dreamy, theatrical, and surreal all at once."

SpeakEasy Stage Company will present "Nine" through Feb. 20 at the Boston Center for the Arts, 539 Tremont St., Boston. For tickets and information, contact the Boston Theatre Scene box office by telephone at 617-933-8600, or online at bostontheatrescene.com.

Oshkosh my gosh!

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

If you commute along Route 3A, you may have seen Brian Davis' Oshkosh "Snow Fighter," — a plow that hails from Wisconsin,, where they know something about snow.

The 1965-model has been a familiar figure in this area for several years, but more so this year with the region's record snowfall.

"I often say 'It is a bulldog on wheels.'"
— Brian Davis

Six years ago Davis, who lives in Hingham but is co-owner of Cohasset-based Rosano-Davis, bought the truck from a man in Readville, Mass. But in its earlier days, the snowplow worked the roads and runways of the Pease Air Force Base in Portsmouth, N.H.

Oshkosh trucks are popular in the Midwest and areas like Buffalo – where 100 or more inches of snow is nothing unusual.

Super finalists

Interviews held this week

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The Cohasset Schools is on the brink of hiring a new superintendent.

The three finalists were announced at a special meeting of the School Committee held on Saturday morning. The final three candidates were interviewed in public meetings over two nights this week (Wednesday and Thursday).

Barbara Cataldo, current assistant superintendent in Milford, Mass.; James Kelleher, current assistant superintendent in Scituate; and Kimberly Shaver-Hood, superintendent of schools for Blackstone/Millville Regional, are the final candidates.

The school committee is looking to replace Superintendent of Schools Denise Walsh who decided not to renew her contract after the current school year. She has served as the head of Cohasset Schools for six years.

The school committee plans to visit each of the candidates in their own school district next week. The committee will deliberate and vote on their choice for the next superintendent at their meeting Wednesday, March 2.

A screening committee, an appointed committee of 13 made up of various representatives from constituent groups, narrowed the field from 22 applications and interviewed 10 candidates before turning in their recommendations to the school committee. The hiring of the superintendent is the sole responsibility of the school committee.

"The group was thoughtful and informed and brought varied experience and insight to the process," stated a

It's all the family

Cohasset resident writes two novels based on ancestors

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Pete Longley is used to dealing with facts and details. In his work as an architect, he designs buildings down to the last specification and revels in the details that make a building a reality.

But, in recent years, Longley has found passion in a very different kind of detail: family history.

The passion has driven him to write two novels based on the facts and circumstances of his seven greats grandfather, John Longley.

Longley has long held an interest in his forebears and where he came from, but until a few years ago he knew next to nothing about the Longley generations before him. Many years ago his grandfather handwrote a six-page letter detailing all he knew of the family history. The letter contained details (such as a relative who drove a Sealtest ice cream truck), but no dates.

"There was no clarity beyond a few generations," Longley said. He and his father had planned to research their family's genealogy, but never got the chance. His father passed away in 2005.

On the night of his father's death with a dose of guilt that he and his father never research the family's origins he grabbed his credit card and signed onto ancestry.com and began searching.

At 2:30a.m. came the "eureka moment." He stumbled upon a scanned book with his grandfather's name. The book contained the Longley family genealogy going back 10 generations.

"This is a story about people who go through a terrible time in their lives, but they find healing and the will to move on. And that is as much a today story as it was in 1694."

The Mariner caught up with PSO president Jenni Milanoski at the Deer Hill School earlier this week. The PSO has long been a part of Cohasset Schools and frequently sponsor special events to enhance the curriculum as well as other projects to enhance the learning experience for Cohasset children.

Name: Jenni Milanoski.

Occupation: Mom, President of the Cohasset PSO (Parent Student Organization) and development director at St. Jerome's.

Best day of your life: Any day that I live in the moment.

Best vacation: I love going to New York City – not relaxing, but my favorite place to visit!

Favorite season: Summer.

Favorite junk food or meal: Chinese food at Feng Shui.

Best book: "To Kill a Mockingbird."

Best movie (or actor): Not a real movie buff – I am more a theatre gal. I love Broadway musicals!

Best TV show: "Grey's Anatomy" and "The Today Show."

Favorite song: "Seasons of Love" from "Rent."

Fun fact about yourself: I love family history and enjoy making scrapbooks for my family and friends.

Pet peeve: When people arrive late.

Goal: To finish the renovation of our 1790 home.

Person you'd most like to meet: Maya Angelou.

Biggest worry: From a PSO point of view, in these tough times, I see our schools facing big budget challenges and potential cuts. It is my hope that parents participate in the process and know what is at stake — and how important it is for their voices to be heard.

Best part of Cohasset: Bassing Beach – and of course, our schools. I am proud to be part of a community that has such a high value for education and parents that participate and make a difference!

Cohasset Mariner 'drop box'

The Cohasset Mariner has a "drop box" and pickup location at Tedeschi's in the village. The drop box is on the counter in the front window around the corner to the left after you enter the front door.

The Mariner picks up at 8 a.m. on Mondays and Tuesdays. The drop box can be used to drop off glossy photographs, letters, flyers or other editorial copy.

Sand, salt available

Cohasset DPW reminds residents that a sand and salt mixture is available in the upper corner of the town parking lot.

When snow is forecast, residents are asked to not park on streets plowed by the town to expedite snow removal. Vehicles that obstruct snow removal operations will be towed at the owner's expense. Residents and contractors are reminded not to move snow, ice or water onto roadways that may impede traffic.

The town is not responsible for damage to mailboxes, driveway aprons, walkways, stone walls, grassed areas, shrubs, trees or fences that fall within the town layout.

Planning for disaster

Selectmen comment on hazard mitigation plan

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Flooding, hurricanes, earthquakes, tornadoes, brush fires.

These are situations that the town has little control over when they happen, but the town does have the ability to mitigate their impact in some cases.

To that end, the town is in the process of updating its hazard mitigation plan. The plan is not only important in order to identify risks within the town, but also it allows the town to get federal and state funding grants in the case of natural disasters.

James Fread, a regional planner with the Metropolitan Area Planning Council (MAPC), has been working closely with building inspector Bob Egan and other town employees on the hazard mitigation plan. He presented the updated draft of the plan to the Board of Selectmen on Monday night.

The plan was originally developed following the Federal Disaster Mitigation Act of 2000. It is required all municipalities have one to be eligible to received FEMA funding for hazard mitigation grants. The plan must be updated every five years in order to remain grant eligible.

"It's a collection of long-range strategies to reduce the overall vulnerability of the town to natural hazard events," Fread said.

In Cohasset, and coastal towns in general, the hazard mitigation focuses on flooding areas and infrastructure concerns. But, the plan also assesses the potential impacts to the town from flooding, high winds, winter storms, brushfire, and geological hazards.

"Flooding, driven by hurricanes, nor'easters and other storms, clearly present the greatest hazard to the town, most especially in the James Brook watershed and coastal areas," the report states.

The 90-page hazard mitigation plan is different from the many plans that exist for emergency management as those plans deal with how to handle emergency and disasters as they are happening. The hazard mitigation plan identifies areas within the town where there are risks and points to potential solutions. It evaluates the vulnerability of neighborhood and critical infrastructure to certain disasters.

For example, the report identifies the rebuilding of the Bound Brook Dam, culvert at Jerusalem Road (near Bow Street), Margin Street seawall, Jacob's Meadow saltmarsh restoration and flood control as a priorities based on routine flooding in those areas. Other high priority items include the replacement of the generator at the fire/police station on Elm Street.

According to the report, Cohasset has experiences 17 natural hazards that triggered federal or state disaster declarations since 1991. They include Hurricane Bob (1991), No Name Storm (1991), several blizzards, and most recently flooding in March 2010. The vast majority of the events involved flooding.

The town has also received $859,934 in funding from FEMA over the last 20 years to complete hazard mitigation projects. Following severe flooding in 1996 improvements were made to Jacob's Meadow and town-wide drainage to mitigate the potential for flooding in the future.

After being available for public comment (until next week or so) the plan will be sent to the Massachusetts Emergency Management Agency (MEMA) for approval and then on to FEMA. The plan will eventually come back to the Board of Selectmen for adoption.

The Selectmen made several comments on the details of the report, but overall commended it for its thoroughness.

Briefly

Special Town Meeting warrant

The Special Town Meeting scheduled for Monday, March 14 will have one article. The article will deal with covering the $265,000 deficit found in the water department's budget during the recent audit. If approved, the article will ask for a transfer from the stabilization fund to the water department's budget.

In a change from past practice the special town meeting will be held in the high school auditorium. Interim town manager Steve Lombard said he looked up historical data on the attendance at special town meetings over the past few years. Only one had close to 500 attendees, a number the auditorium can handle.

Lombard did have some concerns with the one article warrant in getting a 100-citizen quorum.

"It is an important meeting to be at, if we don't (approve the article) the tax bills won't go out again," Lombard said.

Insurance committee appointed

The Board of Selectmen appointed nine members to a recently formed insurance advisory committee. In January, the Board of Selectmen voted to form an Insurance Advisory Committee, as outlined in the state's general laws. The committee's charge will be review and make a recommendation for changes in health insurance.

According to state law, the committee must include at least seven members from different unions within the town and one retiree.

The establishment of this committee is the first step the town must take in order to make any changes to town employees' health insurance plans. The town has 11 unions and, at this time, any changes to health insurance must involve contract negotiations.

The members include Detective Garrett Hunt (of police officers union), Lieutenant William Quigley (of police lieutenant's union), Patricia Lowery (of dispatchers union), Captain Paul Bilodeau (of fire department union), Dr. Ann Thomae and as an alternate, Karen McInnis (of Cohasset Teachers Association), Kristin Norton (library union), Jane Henderson (clerical association) and Steve Wigmore (retiree representative).

Fire hydrant help

Fire hydrants should always be accessible.

A clearly visible, accessible fire hydrant can save a home — or even a life.

If a fire hydrant is lost or buried in snow, firefighters can lose valuable time trying to locate it when they first arrive at a fire, said Fire Chief Robert Silvia.

For those hydrants not so severely buried, they are asking residents to help out and keep the town safe for everyone.

"Any assistance is greatly appreciated and increases the safety of your neighborhood," Silvia said.

Here are some simple steps to follow:

- Know the location of all fire hydrants in your neighborhood.
- Shovel out these fire hydrants each time you shovel your stairs, walks or driveways.
- Clear away any snow and ice in the area surrounding these fire hydrants.
- Shovel out these fire hydrants as often as necessary to keep them visible and accessible during heavy or prolonged snowfall.

Police Beat

Snow banks cause bottleneck on Station Drive

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Police notified the MBTA last Monday (Jan. 31) to reduce the snow banks on Station Drive, the small driveway from North Main Street into the Greenbush train station. The small driveway had become so narrow due to the encroaching snow banks that cars coming and going could not pass, causing train station traffic to back up between the gates and onto the tracks. Police said some motorists grew testy and there was almost a fight there between commuters.

The MBTA came in with a backhoe to remove the snow banks that had become frozen, police said.

OUI charge

A 28-year-old Scituate woman is facing a drunken-driving charge following a traffic stop at about 6:30 p.m. on Sunday (Feb. 6) on Chief Justice Cushing Highway (Route 3A). Police received several cell phone calls about an erratically operated 2007 white Mitsubishi headed south on Route 3A and pulled the car over. The operator showed signs of intoxication and was arrested and charged with operating under the influence of alcohol, negligent operation, driving without headlights and operating without a license. (She had a Florida license but is a resident of Scituate, police said).

Witnesses also pulled over and told police they had seen her swerving and hitting snow banks all along Route 3A, police said.

Sickly fox

Police responded to a call last Monday (Jan. 31) at 10:17 a.m. from South Main Street about a coyote in a backyard. As it turned out the animal was a fox that appeared sick and ran off into the woods. The animal control officer was notified that there is a sickly fox in the area should there be more calls about the animal, police said.

Bullying

Police said an incident of name-calling at the middle school involving a 13-year-old girl that her father reported to police did not appear to rise to the level of bullying. However, police talked to the school, which was aware of the situation, and the assistant principal was handling it.

Missed curfew

A concerned father called police at 8 a.m. last Wednesday (Feb. 2) when he realized his 16-year-old son had not come home the night before. The front door had also been left wide open. While police were taking the report, the son returned home and said he had fallen asleep at the friend's house and missed his curfew.

No B&E

A possible breaking and entering reported at the Red Lion Inn last week turned out to be a couple of teenage children of an employee that had been playing around near a window, police said.

Deer accident

An 82-year-old Cohasset woman driving a 2006 Hyundai Azera reported that she hit a deer that darted out in front of her car last Thursday (Feb. 3) near Stop and Shop. The deer took off, police said. There was some front-end damage to the car.

Aggressive dog

Scituate police notified Cohasset police last Thursday (Feb. 3) about what they considered to be an aggressive dog that belongs to a Cohasset family. The dog was loose, wandered into the Scituate back yard, and bit a baby on Riverview Drive. The Cohasset Animal Control Officer is following up.

Identity theft

A 33-year-old Cohasset woman tried to use her debit card last week for a $17 purchase and was declined. She called her bank and found out that $1600 in fraudulent charges had been made to her account. The bank put a hold on her card and credited her account. She went to the police to obtain an identity theft packet.

Sideswiped

A 28-year-old Cohasset man operating a 2004 Chevrolet pickup that was headed west on Sohier Street sideswiped a 2007 Toyota Sequoia operated by a 53-year-old Cohasset man last Friday (Feb. 4) at about 6:43 p.m. Police had received reports about the pickup being operated erratically but investigation at the scene revealed the 28-year-old operator did not show signs of intoxication. However, he did have a ruptured eardrum that may have caused his balance to be off. Police filed a medical evaluation form on the driver with the Registry of Motor Vehicles and his truck was towed.

Snowball fight

Police spoke to two teenage girls having a snowball fight in front of the Dunkin Donuts on King Street after a caller from Marshfield in a 2006 Chevrolet Impala reported they accidentally hit her vehicle. The call came in at about 8 p.m. on Saturday (Feb. 5).

Watch for blind spots due to snow banks

With the proliferation of snow — and lack of mild days to melt it — snow has been piling up at intersections creating a dangerous situation for vehicles and pedestrians.

"There are a lot of blind spots out there," said Fire Chief Robert Silvia.

While he urged caution from drivers at these intersections, he also urged drivers to be especially aware of people and pets crossing streets or coming out of driveways.

"Use practical sense and just slow down and be careful," Silvia said. "Soon the sun will come out and the snow will melt and we can get back to regular operation until then if everyone could be a little more careful."

Microscope on the harbor

Harbor master plan possible

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Cohasset Harbor is home to some of the town's most memorable vistas and landmarks. It's a part of the reason many residents move here in the first place. Some people like the way it is. Some people would like to see some changes.

Taking a closer look at the harbor — zoning, access, parking, development — could be on the horizon. On Tuesday night, the Board of Selectmen heard from the Planning Board about doing a harbor management plan.

The planning board has held two public forums in the fall to discuss the need and/or desire for a harbor plan.

The Selectmen need to give the go-ahead for a harbor plan.

Like summer Saturdays on Bassing Beach, the harbor has a lot going on zoning-wise. There are four different zoning districts — residential, downtown business, waterfront business and light industrial — making it a complicated place to develop even if local zoning was the only consideration.

Another layer of federal regulations — Chapter 91, which dates back to colonial days — ensures that water-dependent activities retain access to the water.

Taking a close look at what's possible, not possible and what the townspeople might want to see in the harbor area would be some of the goals of a harbor plan.

"We want to at least looking at what the options are. And I want to be very clear no one is approaching this with some sort of agenda," said planning board chair Al Moore.

In a previous planning board meeting state representatives said the town could develop a harbor management plan in one of two ways. It can be done through a formal regulatory planning method in partnership with the relevant state agencies. The town could also develop a local harbor plan, using a similar method, but that would not involve amending any portion of Chapter 91.

A master plan would likely need the assistance of a consultant, which could be as much as $40,000, Moore said. Community preservation funding could be used for the purpose.

The discussion on defining what's possible on the harborfront is timely because several of the harbor's key parcels are on the real estate market. The Mill River Marina, Atlantica, the Olde Salt House, Cohasset Harbor Inn and "The Oaks" waterfront mansion were put on the market in May for $55 million.

"This is the time to talk about it because we don't have a project (concerning harborfront property) before us," Moore said. "If we get a definitive plan in place we'll know where we are going."

Selectman Fred Koed was in favor of pursuing the harbor plan. "If we have a plan that developers know the town is behind they might be more inclined to invest in the area."

Zoning Board of Appeals chairman Woody Chittick said right now the zoning bylaws at the harbor lean more toward "thou shalt not" and "get in the way of certain desirable changes (that could happen in the harbor area)."

"(Harbor zoning) is a real hodgepodge at this point and someone could find a loophole and we might be vulnerable (to an undesirable development)," Chittick said.

Chairman of the Conservation Commission David Farrag reminded the selectmen to consider the harbor as an environment connected to other areas of the town that could be affected by any changes.

Resident Tom Callahan said one of things that could be addressed is town-wide is there is a 35-foot height restriction in the zoning bylaw.

"If we are worried about views and things like that in the harbor, our zoning bylaw could allow a three-story building where Atlantica is now.

" The zoning bylaw (currently) doesn't address what could happen and what we really want to protect," Callahan said.

While the selectmen seemed in favor of pursuing the harbor master plan, members said there wasn't a need to rush into it.

The selectmen said they would seek advice from town counsel on the next best step and request a draft charter from other harbor plans he has worked on.

Establishing a committee would be next step in the process of a harbor master plan.

Neighboring towns already have harbor management plans in hand. Hull has a state-approved harbor management plan, and Scituate is working toward a local harbor management plan.

Town manager search consultant hired

The Selectmen selected Thomas Groux of Groux and Associates based in North Chatham, Mass. as their town manager search consultant.

The consultant will help guide the Board of Selectmen in its search for a new town manager. Former town manager Bill Griffin retired in October to pursue a job opportunity in the private sector. Interim town manager Steve Lombard has agreed to stay on with the town through May.

The selectmen interviewed three consultants on Thursday (February 3). The other consultant groups were the Collins Center for Public Management and Municipal Resources.

Selectmen chair Karen Quigley said all three consultant presentations were excellent, but Groux's proposal most closely fit the needs of the town and the board.

"(Groux) seemed to be the better fit for Cohasset. He had an excellent written proposal," Quigley said. Part of the process will include several focus group sessions to give the selectmen a better understanding of what different constituent groups are looking for in a town manager.

A screening committee made up of town citizens and/or employees will help narrow down the candidates.

"(Groux) is very experiences, is a former town manager himself and I think he will guide us very well in the process," Quigley said. "It will be an accelerated process, but I think we'll be able to do it."

Help find the next town manager

The Board of Selectmen is looking for residents willing to serve on the screening committee during the search for the next Town Manager. They are looking to put together a group that represents a cross section of interests within the town.

The screening committee will narrow the candidate field, conduct preliminary interviews and recommend a group of finalists to the Board of Selectmen.

If interested in serving on this committee, send a letter of interest to the Town Manager's Office describing your interest and specific skill set.

Letters must be received by Thursday, Feb. 17 and should be sent to Board of Selectmen, 41 Highland Ave., Cohasset or send an e-mail to interim town manager Steve Lombard at slombard@townofcohasset.org.

Turkey Hill turbine forum held

By Mary Aylward Stewart
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

In response to some concerns about the proposed siting by Cohasset of a wind turbine on Turkey Hill, on land owned by The Trustees of Reservations, REACH (Responsible Energy Alternatives Coalition of Hingham) sponsored a forum at Glastonbury Abbey on Monday, Feb. 7), entitled, "Moving Toward Sustainability: The Turkey Hill Wind Turbine."

Carol Valentine, president of REACH, gave a brief review of REACH's involvement in alternative energy. REACH, established in 1978, has been actively involved in energy issues since its inception. Over the years REACH members have researched areas in Hingham as possible sites for wind turbines. Although Hingham has still not found the perfect spot for a wind turbine, REACH continues its advocacy of alternative energy and strongly supports The Trustees of Reservations in their pursuit of establishing a turbine on Turkey Hill.

Carol turned the meeting over to moderator, Clayton Handleman, president of Heliotronics, who serves on the board of the Solar Energy Business Association of New England (SEBANE). Clayton introduced Hull resident and environmentalist Judeth Van Hamm of Sustainable South Shore, member of Weir River Estuary Committee (appointed by the Hull selectmen) and board member of Weir River Watershed Association.

Judeth reflected on the need for alternative energy. Consumption of fossil fuels is responsible for changes in the environment over the years: water level rising, sea level up, more intense rains, and flooding. Businesses are also affected. Lobsters, for example, seek waters lower than 68 degree temperatures; the South Shore is losing its lobster trapping to the cooler waters of Maine. The climate is definitely warming. She tried to make the audience aware of the need to lessen our dependence on fossil fuels. A woman who loves wind turbines, she told the audience that "Hull is very proud of its turbines." In her many conversations with Hull residents, she has met only two people who do not like the turbines. She praised TTOR for "living life well" and Cohasset for looking into wind power.

Two Hull residents who were in the audience came forth to say how close their homes are to Hull II. They talked about initial fears about the turbine, but now look on the turbine as an "elegant design," something their children and grandchildren love. They have learned to "not notice" the "natural noise" of the turbine. The red light atop the turbine, admittedly, does present a bothersome problem. The flicker seems to be overrated. They say it lasts about 20 minutes two days a year, "My electric bills look really good," was one parting remark.

Steve Sloan, Greater Boston Regional Director of The Trustees of Reservations, explained TTOR's reason for erecting a wind turbine. TTOR hopes to be "carbon neutral by 2017." He then launched into a Power Point presentation that showed the proposed Turkey Hill turbine as "such an important part of our [TTOR's] energy future." He showed slide after slide of the turbine from various points in Hingham and projected how, when installed, it would be viewed by Hingham residents.

As well as taking steps to become less dependent on fossil fuels, TTOR is hoping that by its actions it can influence its members and some of the one million people who use TTOR's 50,000 acres yearly. He spoke about the effects that climate change has on the landscape.

When a member of the audience challenged the assertion of climate change, Judeth introduced Bill James, who has followed oil and gas consumption and the effect this consumption has on the economy. James appeared to be quite knowledgeable in this area. His brief response to the questioner was direct, well thought out, and effective. He spelled out the many ways oil consumption affects the economy and said that we should be looking for alternate ways to replace oil in our economy.

Jim Younger, Director of Structural Resources and Technology, TTOR, explained that Turkey Hill, with its 800 acres, was selected as a turbine site because, among other things, the site is relatively remote, no significant impact on natural resources is expected, and the site has good wind capacity. Additionally, the turbine will produce enough kilowatt hours per year to power 750 homes. He showed slides of the proposed turbine in relation to the nearest properties and compared them to the same in Hull. Hingham had no houses within 1,000 feet of the turbine, whereas countless Hull residents lived within that 1,000-foot area in Hull.

Turkey Hill, with its 800 acres, was selected as a turbine site because, among other things, the site is relatively remote...

Younger explained that the figures for sound and flicker painted a "worst case scenario." During the summer months and on the equinox, there is what is termed, a "flicker effect." TTOR worked with experts in these fields who estimated that the flicker effect would not exceed 30 hours/year, which complies with zoning bylaws. Jim had a slide that showed the small district that flicker from the turbine would affect. He explained that turbines now have the capability to shut off to control flicker. In an emergency, this maneuver could be employed.

The "swishing" sound of the turbine came up for discussion. It was acknowledged; the turbine emits a swishing sound. Rockland Street resident Jim Watson likened the swishing sound to a "whish, whish, which is very comforting." It seemed that the audience was more concerned with the flicker effect than it was with the sound.

REACH and TTOR personnel were pleased with the turnout of Hull, Hingham, and Cohasset residents and their participation in the forum.

Mary Aylward Stewart is a Hingham resident and Board Member of REACH.

Deliberations continue on turbine application

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The Cohasset Planning Board made three previous attempts to deliberate on the Trustees of Reservation's Turkey Hill wind turbine application, but each one was thwarted by a snowstorm. At last, on Wednesday night, the planning board began its discussions on the application.

While no official vote was taken on the application, which proposes the installation of an 80-meter (262-foot, 410-feet, including the height of the blades), 1.8-megawatt turbine, indications from the deliberation are the board is moving toward an approval with significant conditions, according to planning board administrator Jo-Ann Pilczak.

For nearly two hours the planning board discussed the merits and concerns of the project, the deliberation determines whether the application meets the requirements of the town's bylaws.

Near the end of the discussion, planning board chair Al Moore called for an informal poll of the board to see where each of the members – and therefore, the board – stood on the application.

All but one planning board member said they were leaning toward an approval with conditions, said Pilczak. The planning board discussed what kind of conditions would be placed on the project to ensure it met the requirements of the bylaw.

The planning board has continued its deliberation to Wednesday, Feb. 23 at 7:30p.m. They are expected to take a vote on the project that night.

The potential turbine site is surrounded by open space and would be sited south of the existing cell towers. During the public hearing process issues of noise, visual impact, ice throw/drop and shadow/flicker were discussed.

The proposed site for the turbine, including setbacks, is entirely in Cohasset, but Hingham residents could potentially be more impacted by the turbine than Cohasset residents. The closest Cohasset residence is the Golden Living Center off Route 3A.

During the course of the public hearing process many Hingham residents spoke of their concerns regarding the project. In addition to concerns of noise, shadow/flicker, the delivery of the very large machine and the impacts of the turbine on a piece of open space.

Gift in memory of grandparents

By Sheila S. Evans
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The Cohasset Library Trust recently received a very generous gift of $10,000 from Priscilla Dewey Houghton and her husband, Amory Houghton Jr., which will significantly enhance the Trust's ability to fulfill its mission to support Cohasset's Paul Pratt Memorial Library into the future.

The gift is in memory of Priscilla's grandparents, Arthur Campbell and Grace Richardson Learnard Badger. It memorializes the Badger family's long and important history in the town of Cohasset. Arthur's father (Priscilla's great-grandfather), Erastus Beethoven Badger, lived in Cohasset as a young man. He wrote in his diary "April 16, 1851 was the high tide when Minot's Ledge Iron Frame light was swept away with the loss of two keepers. We lived at 24 Bridge Street and the water was so high it came into our kitchen and put out the Fire in our cooking stove. It was a terrible storm." Later, his firm, Hicks and Badger, Coppersmiths and Sheet Metal Workers, was chosen to help with the rebuilding of Minot Light. The Badger family genealogy records that "Badger, who was 32 at the time, was the youngest of the group of workers whom he supervised. But he undertook to row them the mile and a half from the nearest point of land to the lighthouse each day, thereby wearing out the seat of his trousers!" He recorded that he "lighted the Lamp on Minot ledge light House for the first time." David Wadsworth, historian of Cohasset's Historical Society, relates that when the copper sheathing of Minot's dome was restored in 1987, the letters " E... BAD..." were found inscribed in the disintegrating copper collar.

In 1908 Arthur and Grace Badger built two summerhouses at the south end of Sandy Cove, looking out at Minot Light. Beginning at that time, Dr. George Badger, Arthur's brother, his wife and two children summered at 95 Atlantic Ave., while Arthur and Grace and their three children were at 91 Atlantic Ave. Priscilla Dewey Houghton, Arthur and Grace's fourth grandchild, spent her first summer in Cohasset before she was one. After her father's death at the age of 35, she and her mother and two brothers lived with her grandparents, the Badgers, in Newton in the winter and Cohasset in the summer.

Dr. Theodore Badger and his wife, Alice, took over both Atlantic Avenue houses from his parents in 1950, and in 1975 sold one to their friend Dr. Robert Sceery. The Badger family continued to summer at their Sandy Cove home until after Dr. Badger's death in 1980. Dr. Badger, a writer and pre-eminent thoracic physician, was awarded by the American Lung Association the Trudeau Memorial Medal for "most meritorious work in the diagnosis, treatment and prevention of tuberculosis and allied diseases."

The remaining Badger house was winterized in 1987 and Priscilla and Amo Houghton live there today. The great-grandchildren, here in the summer, are the sixth generation to come to 91 Atlantic Ave.

The Badger cottages were the first summer cottages on the south end of Sandy Cove. In the early 19th century, this part of the beach was used for salt production and then later for the boat works that prospered with summer visitors wanting to have boats built or repaired.

In many ways, the Badgers' historic connection with Cohasset parallels Cohasset's own history. The late 19th and early 20th century saw the transformation of Cohasset from a small, modest, rural town, dependent on fishing and farming, to a very desirable place for city folks to enjoy the pleasures of summer by the ocean.

2011 Passion Plunge for Special Olympics!

By Taffy Nothnagle
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

March Madness starts early, on Saturday Feb. 26th this year! It's the 13th Passion Plunge for Special Olympics Massachusetts (SOMA). If you're looking for a great event to take part in, or to go watch and cheer on the Plungers, this is it! There's a costume parade at 11:15 a.m., followed by the mad dash of the plungers into the surf at noon at the Mary Jeannette Murray Bathhouse on Nantasket Beach.

Last year, some 940 plungers jumped into the Atlantic Ocean, about half at Nantasket. They raised $400,000 for SOMA (10 percent of the annual budget). As we don't charge our athletes or their families to participate, these funds are vitally important in providing year round training and 130 competitions in 27 sports for our 12,168 athletes. They range in age from two (Young Athletes Program) to 86 (Senior Sports).

In addition to sports training and competition, these donations support Special Olympics' now worldwide "Healthy Athletes" Program, founded here in Massachusetts in 1994, providing free screening in medical and dental issues for our athletes. Of 1,010 athletes screened, 55 were referred for treatment, including one sent directly to the hospital after finding he'd recently had a heart attack. Our joint-venture with UMass Med School trains med students, residents, and doctors in working with people with Intellectual Disabilities, which will lead to quality healthcare for a host of others with ID in the future.

Last year, some 940 plungers jumped into the Atlantic Ocean, about half at Nantasket. They raised $400,000 for SOMA (10 percent of the annual budget).

Jay Nothnagle, plunging for his 11th time, is an athlete and Captain of the South Shore Mariners Team, which includes Cohasset plungers: Connie Afshar, Barbara Canney, Milli Chapell, Jack Delorenzo, Ron Goodwin, Steve Myers, Jeff Nothnagle (past Board Chair), Graham Sida, Nick Sida, Bill Tierney, and Doug Yeager, plus many from other South Shore towns. The funds they raise come back to our local Mariners program, which has 100 athletes from age 6 to 71 from seven area towns.

So "come on down" to Nantasket Beach on Saturday, Feb. 26th, and please support our athletes with a pledge. You can do this with a check to your favorite plunger (payable to Special Olympics), or on-line at "www.PassionPlunge.org", our secure site. We'd also love to have you plunge with us — you can register at that same site! Thanks in advance for your interest and support!

For Michele, one of the greatest advances in cancer care has been the one on the South Shore.

When Michele needed treatment for breast cancer, she was thankful that she could receive world-renowned care at Dana-Farber/Brigham and Women's Cancer Center in clinical affiliation with South Shore Hospital. And she had confidence knowing that our specialists, focused on cancer, were providing the expert care she needed. But she also found something more: how important it was to be treated in a place that not only cared for her cancer, but also for her life.

"It's a place filled with hope," said Michele. And having all the integrated services she needed close to home helped her maintain a sense of normalcy through her treatments. "With two small kids, I don't know how I would have managed otherwise," she explained. "Having this level of cancer care on the South Shore — it means everything to me."

Scott Wahle has never left the stage

Former TV news, sports anchor still in limelight

By Glenda Garland
SPECIAL TO THE JOURNAL

There must be 10 sports metaphors, easily, to describe someone who encounters a stumbling block only to coming roaring back. If there are — even if there are a hundred — Scott Wahle of Hingham probably knows them. That's because Wahle was a news and sports anchor at WBZ-TV for 19 years, until the station reorganized in May of 2008 and let many people with 25-plus years of experience go.

But if Wahle knows 10 metaphors or a hundred, he's not applying them to himself. His phrasing instead was that what happened at WBZ let him focus on looking at where he's been and where he wants to go.

He's certainly found many different paths to explore.

Theater, for example, has been in Wahle's blood since he was a student at Hingham High. "A bunch of us guys would go over to Notre Dame Academy and do musicals in the spring. They needed guys to play roles." At Notre Dame Academy, Wahle met Martha Sawyer and Donna Milani Luther. This Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, Wahle, Sawyer, and Milani Luther will work together for the first time since high school on a production of the musical "Beauty and the Beast", at the Inly School in Scituate. Milani Luther is head of the Inly School and will play Mrs. Potts. Sawyer will direct, and Wahle will play the Beast.

"It's funded by W.B. Mason," Wahle said, "so it's quite an elaborate production. About 70 kids are in the cast, as rose petals and plates. Belle is played by an Inly teacher." That teacher is Denni Edlund, and the costuming looks as well done as Wahle indicated. "It's going to be a fun experience," Wahle said.

Wahle is looking forward as well to his next summer with the Reagle Music Theater. He's been heavily involved with the theater since 2001. Last summer, for example, he had leading roles in two of the theater's three summer musicals, "Into the Woods" and "The Music Man." Wahle praises the Waltham theater's original mission of giving high school kids a way to connect and grow over the summers, and its evolving one of bringing high-quality productions to the area. "Some people have Broadway credits," Wahle said. Then there are also, " … a lot of people who are great who don't do it for a living. I look forward to being on stage with this sort of talent whenever I can."

Wahle is also still on stage with people whose talent lies outside theater. He's frequently asked to emcee charity and civic events. "It's great to get out there and help out," Wahle said. Last week Peter Forman, president of the South Shore Chamber of Commerce, asked Wahle to do a Q&A with Senator Scott Brown. Unfortunately the snowstorms and hazardous driving conditions not only delayed Wahle from getting to the event, but also delayed Senator Brown enough that the event was canceled. Wahle was disappointed, as he's known Senator Brown for a while.

Wahle is also still on stage with people whose talent lies outside theater. He's frequently asked to emcee charity and civic events

Wahle has kept his hand in sports and sports broadcasting, too. He was the play-by-play voice for the "Game of the Week" webcast on wbz.com for the Cape Cod Baseball League. He taught sports broadcasting as an adjunct professor at Curry College. He's also worked as a marketing consultant.

Right now, though, in addition to his off-hours theater work, Wahle is pouring all the valuable experience he has developed over a 30-year career into his new job as the director of strategic marketing for Royal Health Group. The owner of Royal Health Group, Jim Mamary, also lives in Hingham. Wahle enjoys his new job, and the easy commute down to Hanover.

"Being in broadcasting for over 30 years," Wahle said, "I'm on the flip side of the process. There's definitely a learning curve, but that's the fun."

If you're interested in seeing Wahle in "Beauty and the Beast" this Friday, Saturday, or Sunday, check out the Inly School's website at (www.inlyschool.org/beauty-and-the-beast) for more information on show times and ticket prices.

GIMME SHELTER

At over 20 pounds, Frosty is also referred to as the "gentle giant."

Frosty is a friendly fellow

He is a good-natured sort, and gets along with both the human and feline population.

This week we have a cat that sort of reflects the weather. This week Hull Seaside Animal Rescue is featuring, Frosty, an adult male, snow-white short-haired feline. We refer to him as the gentle giant. This guy even likes to be picked up, but as he weighs in at more than 20 pounds, this may not be a good idea. He is a good-natured sort, and gets along with both the human and feline population.

If you'd like to meet him, we have open hours from 2 to 3 p.m., on Saturdays, and 6:30 to 7:30 p.m., on Mondays. You can check out our other cats at www.hsar.org. For more information regarding adoptions, call Shirl at 781-925-3380.

If you'd like to take advantage of our next low cost spay/neuter program, please contact Mary at 781-925-3121. We're located at 50 L Street, Hull. Our mailing address is Hull Seaside Animal Rescue, P.O. Box 787, Hull, MA 02045. Our email address is hsar@verizon.net.

If you'd like to volunteer, we welcome and train newcomers. If you're 16 or older and have a few hours a week to spend with our friendly felines, please call Nancy at 781-925-3638 for details.

A huge thank you to all who support our no kill shelter.

Cohasset resident writes two novels based on ancestors

"It was like all doors had been locked, all the stories forgotten and with this all the door were opened and all the stories were fresh again," Longley said.

In the midst of all the rich history of his family one story stood out — the story of Longley's seven greats grandfather, John. As a 12-year-old boy John was taken captive by Abenaki Indians along with two of his sisters after his parents and five other siblings were massacred in Groton, Mass.

How John survived among his violent captors was a question Longley couldn't stop thinking about. Then, the story got more interesting. The Indians allowed John to leave, but John did not want to return to the place he once called home.

These kind of questions — the why, the reasons behind the choices — burned in Longley. The more research he did the more fascinated he became with the emotional and psychological history behind his ancestors' lives.

What started as a vision to create a complete genealogy report to give to his children, siblings and cousins suddenly became more.

"I wanted to see them and feel them and get into their heads. I began to hear imagined dialogue between them. I found it so fascinating and I thought this is the subject of a novel," Longley said. "I could find a lot of facts, but it doesn't make a real story, it doesn't flesh it out."

STAFF PHOTOS/ROBIN CHAN

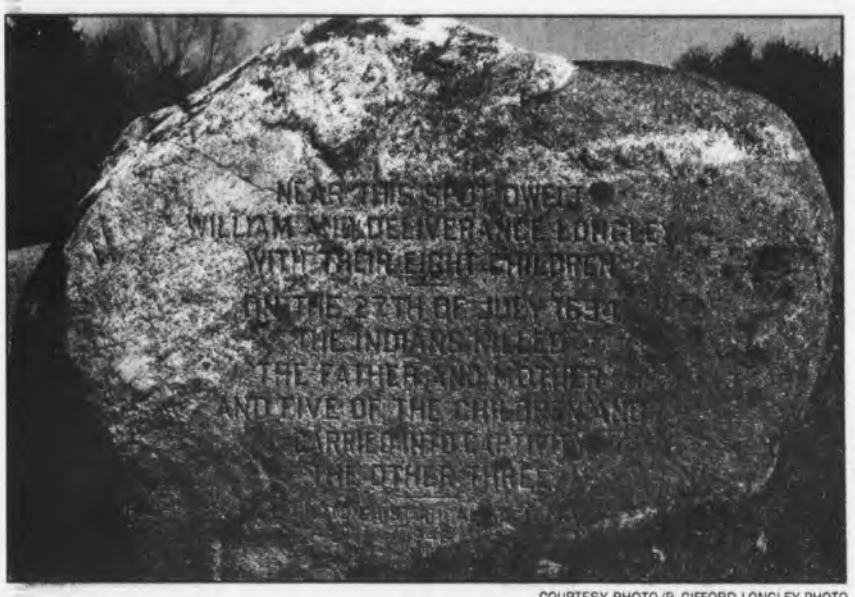
Local architect P. "Pete" Gifford Longley has penned two books, "Captive" and "Compelled," which are based on the story of his seven greats grandfather who was captured by native Americans.

It turns out the story of John Longley was not only the subject of one novel, it was the subject for two novels — Captive and its sequel, Compelled.

"It's mixing what really happened and figuring out the reasons it happened that way," Longley said.

As an architect, who pens specifications for buildings, he never really thought he had a novel inside him. Yet, when pen came to paper the story flowed out. He joined a writers' group that gave him the encouragement and a sounding board.

His wife, Linda, was there to bounce ideas and a travel partner. Together, they went all over New England to visit the graves and historical sites associated with Longley's ancestors.



"The whole thing was a fluke. I really think he was destined to do it," his wife Linda said.

For four years he doggedly sought out the elements of his family's history to tell a rich and mostly accurate portrait of John Longley.

"This is a story about people who go through a terrible time in their lives but they find healing and the will to move on. And that's as much a today story as it was in 1694," Longley said.

Longley and his wife, Linda, have lived in Cohasset for eight years.

Longley writes under the name P. Gifford Longley. His novels, Captive and Compelled, are available at Tate Publishing website (www.tatepublishing.com) or at most internet bookstores.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Beware of email scams

Most of us have received them in our email inboxes.

In fact – unless you are the victim – the content of the email is so ludicrous that it is almost funny.

The email scammer steals the name of someone and the address list in that person's email. Then he or she sends out an email about being stuck overseas with no money and in need of help.

The grammar in these emails is usually overly formal or incorrect – a giveaway that the sender is not whom he is pretending to be but an imposter, probably from a foreign county.

For those whose email has been compromised – the scam is a nuisance. It usually requires abandoning that email address, getting a new email, and notifying everyone in your address book.

In Hingham on Monday, a scammer compromised the email of the Rev. James Rafferty, pastor of St. Paul's Church. Here at the Mariner, we also received the email in which "Jim" stated he was in London, had been a victim of theft, and needed money wired to him. We recognized the email for what it was and quickly deleted it. The fraudulent email went out to all in Rafferty's entire email address book.

After learning about the scam from concerned callers several of whom are parishioners — who also received the bogus email on Monday morning — Hingham Police notified Western Union to be aware of the situation.

Hingham police said a Hingham resident called Monday afternoon to report she had tried to send $2,000 in cash via Western Union, which kicked the money back because they knew about the email scam, police said.

Hingham police sent out a scam alert on their EMAS (Emergency Notification System) notifying residents about the scam. The alert stated that on Feb. 7 investigation showed that the email was fraudulent, and the clergyman's name was falsely used.

Here in Cohasset, two elected town officials – who serve on different boards — were both recent victims of the same scam in which their email address books were compromised. Scammers sent out a similar message about their being stranded overseas and needing money. Both town officials subsequently changed their email addresses and notified those in their address books (including us).

To prevent being a victim of internet or phone scams, computer users are urged to take the following precautions:

- Verify the source of the email
- Do not give out personal information over the internet
- Delete the email
- Be suspicious of anyone asking you to wire money

The Cohasset Mariner is building a Readers Advisory Network of e-mail addresses so we can more frequently involve our readers in the content of the newspaper.

Readers, who join the network, may be asked for reactions to stories, ideas for stories or follow-ups, for a digital "person on the street" interview, or for a community commentary.

If you are interested in becoming a member of the network, email Mary Ford at mford@cnc.com. She will answer any questions that you may have. The Mariner promises to remove you immediately from the Readers Advisory Network if you request that we do.

Do you want to go to France?

By Beth Marat
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

I am again writing to you from the Foreign Language Department at Cohasset High School regarding the developing relationship between the towns of Cohasset and Scituate with Scituate's soon-to-be official "sister city" of Sucy-en-Brie, France. On Feb. 20, 42 Cohasset and Scituate High School students and 4 faculty members will depart Boston to spend 2 weeks with our "penpals" at a high school in Sucy, the same penpals who spent 2 weeks on the South Shore with us in October 2010. This is the third time in 5 years that Cohasset and Scituate students have participated in an Exchange with Sucy students.

When the Sucy students were here in October, they were accompanied for part of the time by 5 delegates from the Sucy town government who toured Scituate and Cohasset, met with leaders of local organizations, and signed a friendship pact with the town of Scituate and their Board of Selectmen. The Sucy delegation is planning a similar red-carpet welcome and VIP treatment for a delegation of citizens (3-5) from Scituate and/or Cohasset during the student exchange later this month.

Unfortunately, some of the representatives from Scituate who were to travel to France are as of now unavailable to accompany us. Therefore, we are looking for any interested parties who would like to be a part of the delegation and travel to Sucy to represent our towns and organizations. Participation would entail traveling to France for approximately 5 days during the last week in February, being hosted in the home of one of the Sucy dignitaries, meeting representatives from various Sucy cultural, sports, civic and other organizations, and becoming familiar with Sucy and the surrounding area (including Paris 10 miles away). All of your meals and lodging will be provided by the Sucy delegation — your expense will be airfare at the group travel rate of approximately $800.

If you or one of your acquaintances or colleagues are interested in participating in this initiative to create opportunities on both sides of the Atlantic and would enjoy visiting France as a guest-of-honor, please contact Mrs. Patricia Jacquart, Chair of the Scituate High School Foreign Language Department and principal liaison between our schools and the town of Sucy. She can provide detailed dates and schedules, as well as further information about the relationships between our 3 towns. Mrs. Jacquart can be reached at Scituate High School via e-mail at pjacquart@scit.org or via her personal e-mail at p.jacquart@comcast.net, as well as by phone at (617) 842-9027 (cell), 781-545-5589 (home), or (781) 545-8750 (Scituate HS).

More information about the Exchange between our 3 high schools is available at the website www.scsfrenchexchange.wikispaces.com (an ever-evolving site containing cultural information, itineraries, photos from the October portion of the Exchange, and more). During our time in France, we will be regularly posting to our blog at www.scsfrenchexchange.blogspot.com.

You are also welcome to contact me at Cohasset High School — bmarat@cohassetk12.org or by cell phone at 781-439-2845.

We would welcome your participation and look forward to hearing from you.

Diamonds – and DeBeers

FAMOUS BIRTHDAYS

MARY KENNEDY

Square shape or pear shape, these rocks won't lose their shape. Diamonds are a girl's best friend.

So goes the song, but are diamonds really a girl's best friend? According to DeBeers, the cartel that controls close to 80 percent of the world's unpolished rocks, the answer is yes!

The lure of diamonds began with their discovery about 4000 years ago in Borneo and India. In the earliest Indian myths, diamonds were considered the essence of purity and power. Only maharajas – and later, emperors and kings – owned them. The world's oldest diamond, the 108-carat Kohinoor ("mountain of light"), belonged to an Indian Mogul king who wore it in his turban. Centuries later, the diamond ended up in Queen Victoria's crown when she became Empress of India in 1877. Today, although India has formally demanded its return, the diamond sits in the Tower of London, a centerpiece in the crown made for Queen Elizabeth (mother of the present queen).

Even popes believed in the power of diamonds. In 1534, physicians of a very ill Pope Clement VII ground enough of the gems to make up 14 teaspoons full of powder. Alas, only two weeks and some 40 thousand ducats later, the pope succumbed. Death by diamond dust, it would seem.

In 1870, huge diamond mines were discovered in South Africa, and by 1888 an enterprising English businessman, Cecil Rhodes, had co-founded De Beers Mining Co. Ltd. His marketing strategy was simple: Control production and perpetuate the myth that diamonds were scarce. Consumers always pay more for rare. De Beers soon owned 90 percent of the world's supply of a very common commodity.

One of the world's most successful advertising campaigns was launched by De Beers in 1947. To sell more diamonds in the United States, the company created the slogan A Diamond is Forever. By the 1950s, a young lady's success was measured not only by brains, beauty or wealth, but also by the size of the diamond on her finger.

The success of De Beers in Japan was even more phenomenal. Until the 1960s, Japanese traditions of courtship and marriage did not include diamonds. Less than 5 percent of Japanese brides wore a diamond engagement ring. To create desire, then turn that desire into buying behavior in a flourishing economy, De Beers advertising promised that diamonds represented modern Western values. Magazine ads showed beautiful women wearing European fashions and displaying diamonds. The message was clear: Goodbye to old-fashioned Oriental values; hello to modern life. Diamond sales soared. By 1981 some 60 percent of Japanese brides were wearing diamond rings. Also clamoring to wear diamond jewelry were the mothers and wives of successful businessmen. It took only about 15 years to radically revise 1,500 years of Japanese tradition.

Today, although India has formally demanded its return, the diamond sits in the Tower of London, a centerpiece in the crown made for Queen Elizabeth (mother of the present queen).

And today? Although antitrust laws prevent De Beers from operating in the U.S., the company can still advertise. In fact, it spends more than $172 million on major campaigns in 29 countries. The guidelines still recommend that a ring should be worth two month's of the buyer's salary. And – oddly – the fact that diamonds are plentiful and thus should be inexpensive, rarely merits a mention.

Why buy diamonds? American diamond merchant Harry Winston once said: "All creatures in the animal kingdom are drawn to light. It's instinctive, a part of our nervous systems. Everyone is attracted to diamonds because they are light."

And yet – thanks to the latest technology, it is now possible to grow a more perfect diamond in a lab than can be found in nature. Interested? Check out Apollo Diamond Co.

A vote for local politics

FOR THE RECORD

GREGORY MATHIS

The late Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neill, longtime U.S. Congressman from Massachusetts, coined the phrase, "All politics is local."

Local politics, however, does not always spur the voter passion and participation it should.

Following impressive voter participation in January 2010 to decide who would fill the late Sen. Ted Kennedy's seat and near record turnouts in the Nov. 2 State Election, our civic attention now turns to more local matters. Town meetings and town elections will soon be upon us and one would think there would be even more participation with so much at stake, so close to home.

One of the many great New England traditions is Town Meeting. In most towns in our coverage area, if you're registered to vote in town, you're eligible to show up at Town Meeting and cast a vote on any and all matters discussed. While some towns have mayors, city or town councils and representative Town Meeting, the level of participation can be impressive and a resident's vote even more significant in shaping town policies.

But it's only impressive if enough residents take part in the process. Too often a small number of voters decide how millions of dollars of taxpayer money is going to be spent in areas that have a direct impact on the quality of life in the community.

Your property taxes contribute to public education, public safety, public works (road maintenance, water quality, etc.), and other important local services and Town Meeting is where a lot of those decisions are finalized and ultimately approved.

For those who think the only purpose of Town Meeting is to rubberstamp decisions already made by town officials, there is a way to get involved and not sit on the sidelines while others make important decisions. Run for office.

In cities and towns all over the Commonwealth there has been a lack of interest in local elections. Turnout percentages and election ballots tell the tale. Many elected positions go uncontested, leading to lackluster voter participation at the polls. We're quick to blame voters for being apathetic when no one shows up to vote on Election Day. But there's plenty of blame to go around at the local level.

A selectman in one of the towns we cover joked a couple of years back when running unopposed for reelection.

"Either it means we're doing a great job or it means no one wants to step up and volunteer, and I'm going with the former."

The truth is, the hours aren't great, the pay is inconsequential or non-existent, and many of the decisions made by town officials are scrutinized, debated and disputed. The actual process of campaigning and running for office can be intimidating as well. It not only costs money, it also puts your private life into the public spotlight. Some people just aren't comfortable with that.

It's no wonder people aren't lining up to run for political office.

Now, more than ever, town officials are being forced to make tough decisions. Limited by Proposition 2-1/2 and dealing with decreasing financial support from the state, towns are finding it nearly impossible to make ends meet. Nobody wants to cut essential town services, eliminate popular school programs, raise athletic fees, or layoff firefighters.

So where does that leave local politics? We'll know more in the months ahead, but if recent history is any indication, voters will pass this time around on the important local issues and races, and wait for the next big state or national election to come along. Let's hope not.

HEALTH NOTES

Choosing a medical specialist

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Coincidence is the collision of circumstance. Have you ever thought about how many times seemingly little incidents have had a big effect on one;s life? An example given at a lecture on the subject some years ago depicted a bird flying over a volcano hit by a rock thrown out by spewing lava.

Selecting a Primary Care Physician Another example of coincidence is the selection of your PCP whose role is to:

- Provide preventive care and teach healthy lifestyle choices
- Identify and treat common medical conditions
- Assess the urgency of your medical problems and direct you to the best place for that care
- Make referrals to medical specialists when necessary

Primary care is usually provided in an outpatient setting. However, if you are admitted to the hospital, your PCP may assist in or direct your care, depending on the circumstances.

Having a primary care provider can give you a trusting, ongoing relationship with one medical professional over time. You can choose from several different types of PCPs:

- Family practitioners — doctors who have completed a family practice residency and are board certified, or board eligible, for this specialty. The scope of their practice includes children and adults of all ages and may include obstetrics and minor surgery.
- Pediatricians — doctors who have completed a pediatric residency and are board certified, or board eligible, in this specialty. The scope of their practice includes the care of newborns, infants, children, and adolescents.
- Internists — doctors who have completed a residency in internal medicine and are board certified, or board eligible, in this specialty. The scope of their practice includes the care of adults of all ages for many different medical problems.
- Obstetricians/gynecologists — doctors who have completed a residency and are board certified, or board eligible, in this specialty. They often serve as a PCP for women, particularly those of childbearing age.
- Nurse practitioners (NP) and physician assistants (PA's) — practitioners who go through a different training and certification process than doctors. They are often referred to as "physician extenders." They may be your key contact in some practices. All PA's or NPs consult with physicians.

Many insurance plans limit the providers you can choose from, or provide financial incentives for you to select from a specific list of providers. Make sure you know what your insurance covers before starting to narrow down your options.

If you do not currently have a primary health care provider, and a health care problem arises, it is usually best to seek non-emergency care from an urgent care center rather than a hospital emergency room. This will often save you time and money.

When choosing a PCP, also consider the following:

- Is the office staff friendly and helpful? Is the office good about returning calls?
- Are the office hours convenient to your schedule?
- How easy is it to reach the provider? Does the provider use email?
- Do you prefer a provider whose communication style is friendly and warm, or more formal?
- Do you prefer a provider focused on disease treatment, or wellness and prevention?
- Does the provider have a conservative or aggressive approach to treatment?
- Does the provider order a lot of tests?
- Does the provider refer to other specialists frequently or infrequently?
- What do colleagues and patients say about the provider?
- Does the provider invite you to be involved in your care? Does the provider view your patient-doctor relationships a true partnership?

You can get referrals from: trusted Friends, neighbors, or someone with medical knowledge.

- State-level medical associations, nursing associations, and associations for physician assistants
- Your dentist, pharmacist, optometrist, previous provider, or other health professional
- Advocacy groups — especially to help you find the best provider for a specific chronic condition or disability
- Many health plans, such as HMOs or PPOs, have websites, directories, or customer service staff who can help you select a PCP who is right for you

Another option is to request an appointment to "interview" a potential provider. There may be no cost to do this, or you may be charged a co-payment or other small fee. Some practices, particularly pediatric practice groups, may have an open house where you have an opportunity to meet several of the providers in that particular group.

If you do not currently have a primary health care provider, and a health care problem arises, it is usually best to seek non-emergency care from an urgent care center rather than a hospital emergency room. This will often save you time and money. In recent years, many emergency rooms have expanded their services to include reasonably priced urgent care within the emergency room itself or an adjoining area. To find out, call the hospital first.

Cohasset democrats elect delegates to convention

Registered Democrats in Cohasset held their annual caucus at Paul Pratt Library on Feb. 4. Elected as delegates to the Democratic State Convention were Peter Pescatore, Agnes McCann, Gail Collins, Susan Kent and Kevin McCarthy. The convention will take place at Tsongas Arena in Lowell on June 4. All Massachusetts Democrats chosen at their caucuses will gather to adopt a new Action Agenda outlining grassroots and party building initiatives to build on the successes in Massachusetts this year and to prepare for the 2012 elections.

As part of the preparations for the convention an Action Agenda Committee made up of representatives appointed from each district in Massachusetts will meet every month and communicate information to each of the town committees for the convention and ultimately for the 2012 election cycle. Efforts are going forth to build on the successes of the November 2010 election in which all Massachusetts representatives to Congress were re-elected. Part of the success of the 2010 election was grassroots, through widespread canvassing, door to door, which helped educate the electorate and bring out voters. John Walsh, Democratic State Committee Chairman, at a meeting of the South Shore Democratic Caucus held at the Paul Pratt Library on Feb. 3, remarked that the South Shore had the fourth highest door-knocking in the country, according to the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee, with the City of Quincy ranking number one in the state. All five delegates look forward to gathering information at the convention and bringing back strategies for electing Democrats to office in 2012.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE: Beacon Hill Roll Call records the votes of local representatives' votes on three roll calls from sessions during the week of January 17-21. There were no roll calls in the House or Senate last week.

AUDIT HOUSE ACCOUNTS (H 2011)

House 154-0, approved a rule requiring the outside, private company that annually audits the financial accounts of the House to operate in accordance with federal standards for audits of government. The proposed rule also requires that the House Business Manager provide the independent auditor with any documents requested.

Supporters of the rule said this would strengthen and improve the auditing of the millions of dollars that it takes to operate the House and ensure money is not being wasted. They noted that recent audit reports have been brief, useless ones which are just a few pages long.

A very similar rule was defeated overwhelmingly by the House in 2009 by a 16-138 vote. At that time, opponents of the rule said the audits are conducted independently and comprehensively and noted that copies of these audits are available to the public. They argued that the amendment goes too far and would destroy the flexibility of the company that performs the audit.

Several dozen legislators switched their votes from "No" in 2009 to "Yes" in 2011.

(Both roll calls are listed. The first is from 2009; the second is from 2011. On both roll calls, a "Yes" vote is for the rule setting new conditions for the audit. A "No" vote is against the rule.)

RULINGS (H 2011)

House 32-119, rejected a rule providing that the Speaker of the House, advised by the House Clerk, be allowed to enforce all committee rules and practices that are established by House or joint House-Senate rules other than the internal practices of each committee. The House Clerk, while the official parliamentarian of the House, technically does not make rulings but advises the Speaker on how he or she should rule.

Supporters of the rule said they often question whether a committee is following rules for things like meeting deadlines for reporting out bills. They noted violation of these rules is serious and can affect the fate of legislation. They argued that whenever they question whether a rule is being followed, the Clerk advises the Speaker to rule that it is not within his purview to determine whether a rule is being violated.

Opponents of the rule said since neither the Speaker nor the Clerk attend committee meetings, they do not have the first-hand knowledge to respond to complaints pertaining to the committees' actions.

(A "Yes" vote is for the rule requiring the Clerk to advise the Speaker to make a ruling. A "No" vote is against the rule.)

ADMIT LATE-FILED BILLS (S 6)

House 124-31, approved a motion to eliminate a new joint rule, approved by the Senate, which would automatically admit late-filed bills to the Legislature for consideration after 30 days even if one branch is still delaying admitting the measure.

Supporters of the rule said this would stop the practice under which one branch can indefinitely delay admitting late-filed legislation submitted by a member of the other branch. They argued that the rule is a start and would eliminate one of the many ways in which a bill can be killed.

Opponents of the new rule said there have not been complaints from members about the Senate not admitting House bills.

(A "Yes" vote is for striking the new rule and therefore against automatic admission after 30 days. A "No" vote is for automatic admission.)

ALSO UP ON BEACON HILL

At the beginning of each legislative session, interest groups announce their legislative agenda and priorities.

This week, Beacon Hill Roll Call looks at the agenda for two groups with very opposite agendas - Massachusetts Citizens for Life and NARAL Pro-Choice Massachusetts.

Citizens for Life has listed the following as its 2011-2012 priorities:

RIGHT TO KNOW - Requires that a woman seeking an abortion be made aware of the development of her child and the many risks involved for her. Also requires a waiting period prior to the abortion.

GENDER SELECTION - Prohibits using abortion as a tool for choosing the sex of a child.

PARTIAL BIRTH ABORTION - Bans so-called partial birth abortions.

20 WEEKS - Contends that children have the ability to feel pain at 20 gestational weeks or earlier and bans nearly all abortions after that time.

TAXPAYER MONEY - Allows a taxpayer to opt out of having his or her tax payments used to pay for abortions. Also permits the taxpayer to earmark the same amount of their taxes to instead go to the state's Baby Safe Haven Law - allowing parents to leave their baby under the age of seven days at a police or fire station or hospital emergency room.

NARAL Pro-Choice Massachusetts has listed the following as its 2011-2012 priorities:

AGE OF CONSENT - Lowers from 18 to 16 the age of consent for a woman to obtain an abortion without parental permission.

SEX EDUCATION - Ensures that schools offer age-appropriate, medically accurate information about the benefits of abstinence and delaying sexual activity; requires that students be taught how to effectively use contraceptives; and provides instruction on the relationship and communication skills needed to form healthy, respectful relationships and make healthy decisions.

ARCHAIC LAWS - Strikes several laws from the Bay State law books including the ones banning all abortions, prohibiting most abortions after the twelfth week of pregnancy and banning birth control for unmarried couples. These laws are not enforced but also have never been repealed or declared invalid by a court.

FEMALE INMATES - Prohibits shackling of prison inmates during childbirth and establishes minimum standards for the treatment and medical care of female inmates to promote safe, healthy pregnancy outcomes.

Y = Yes; N = No, NV = No Vote *President rarely votes

Democratic Town Committee to host Movie Night

This made for TV movie shows how Grandin's youth was plagued by her struggles with anxiety, social awkwardness and what now is known as sensory defensiveness...

The movie "Temple Grandin" will be February's movie night presented by Cohasset Democratic Town Committee. Emmy award winner Claire Danes stars as Temple Grandin, a young woman diagnosed with autism as a child in the early '50s. At that time the thinking of most psychiatrists was that autism was caused not by nature, but by nurture and blamed cold, unemotional "refrigerator" mothers for their child's affliction. Determined to help her daughter, whose psychiatrist first diagnosed Temple with infantile schizophrenia, Temple's mother, Eustacia replied, "I'm supposed to have done this; well then, I can undo it."

This made for TV movie shows how Grandin's youth was plagued by her struggles with anxiety, social awkwardness and what now is knowN as sensory defensiveness manifested by her aversions to being touched and her sensitivity to noise, physical sensations and visual images. Her middle and high schools years were plagued by taunts and insults. Grandin has stated 'I could laugh about it now, but back then it really hurt."' Helped by her mother and a few innovative and understanding teachers, Grandin was able to tap into her intellect and her talents.

She was sent by her mother as a teen to a relative's ranch in Arizona for a summer where she developed her love and understanding of animals, particularly horses and cattle. It was here that she designed a "squeeze chute," modeled after the squeeze chutes used to manage cattle, to relieve her panic and anxiety. In 1965 Grandin developed a device called the "hug machine" designed to apply deep pressure to individuals with sensory integration disorder in order to calm hypersensitive persons, particularly those with autism spectrum disorder.

Grandin has earned a bachelor of arts degree in psychology from Franklin Pierce University and later a doctorate degree in animal science from Arizona State University. She was awarded an Honorary Doctorate of Humane Letters from Duke University. Grandin is known worldwide for her expertise in animal management and has, as well, been a continuing advocate for parents, teachers and individuals with autism spectrum disorder. She has written six books, four of them on autism, the latest of which is "The Way I see it: A Personal look at Autism and Asperger's" in which she offers do's and don'ts and practical strategies based on her research and her personal experiences with autism.

The public is invited to watch Temple Grandin's inspiring life story at 7 p.m., on Friday, Feb. 18, in the meeting room of Paul Pratt Memorial Library.

The influence of summer people had a profound influence on the character of Cohasset. The summer cottages provided numerous jobs for many local residents, St. Stephens Episcopal Church was built, and the Golf Club and Yacht Club were established.

The Badgers understood the beauty of Cohasset, planting native shrubs close to the beach. Bayberries and beach plums still thrive there today, attracting birds and berry pickers, and continuing the family's love of Cohasset's special nature.

The Cohasset Library Trust will honor that legacy with the inscription of "In memory of Arthur and Grace Badger" on the Library's Endowment Wall in the spring.

Applications for public housing

Cohasset Housing Authority is seeking Cohasset residents over the age of 60 who are qualified applicants for its waiting list for one-bedroom public housing units.

The gearing and flatbed/plow control mechanism on board Brian Davis' 1965 Oshkosh "Snow Fighter."

Old 'snow fighter' is still on the job

Mike Davis of Norwell usually drives the Oshkosh that plows along Route 3A from the Hingham Rotary to the Weymouth line.

The Oshkosh has a diesel engine and "all the power in the world," Davis said. "I often say 'it is a bulldog on wheels.'"

The Oshkosh does not have a nickname – but Davis said he often asks, "Who is going to drive the beast?"

The 30-foot-long truck can hold 10 yards of sand and has all-wheel drive. Most plows — which double in the warmer months as dump trucks — only have rear-wheel drive. The Oshkosh has just four wheels making for better traction. "It can out perform a 10-wheeler dump truck," Davis said.

Davis has another Oshkosh, a 1964 model, with a wing plow.

"Some people collect stamps," Davis said. "I collect trucks."

At his Hingham home, Davis owns a black pickup truck, which is the last pickup owned and operated by Johnny Cash. He said he bought it at a Sotheby's auction.

"Some people collect stamps. I collect trucks."

Rosano-Davis' Oshkosh "Snow Fighter" is an all-wheel drive, plow/sander that holds 10 yards of sand.

A plume of smoke billows up as the Oshkosh is started up.

The 1965 Oshkosh "Snow Fighter" has few electrical parts, relying heavily instead on mechanical switches to run the giant engine and four-wheel drive system.

Cohasset's Alex Kinnealey tries to step out of a hold by his Foxboro opponent during their match on Saturday. Kinnealey is expected to get a good seed at the Div. 3 Individual South Sectionals this weekend in Foxboro.

Cohasset's Greg Berube (112 lbs) grapples with Tim Duree of Foxboro. Berube won the match and was unbeaten in three matches during the day.

WRESTLING

By William Wassersug
WWASSERS@CNC.COM

It was a bit of a mixed bag for the Cohasset wrestling team on Saturday when they hosted the Div. 3 South Sectional Team Tournament.

The Skippers finished fourth, but were right in the running.

Cohasset had a bye in the first round and followed with a 45-30 win over Rockland in the second round.

Next was a 36-22 loss to eventual champion Hingham.

In the battle for third place, Cohasset fell to Foxboro 38-32.

Still, Cohasset coach Torin Sweeney said there were some excellent performances, and it was a good warm up for this weekend's Div. 3 Individual Tournament at Foxboro.

"Thomas Flibotte had a big day," Sweeney said. "He won all three of his matches. He had a really big match with Hingham's Justin Fahie. Thomas majored him 12-4."

Graden Foley had a good day as well, winning three matches.

"They'll have a chance if they wrestle well. The top four in each class go. You really have to wrestle well. You can't have an off day."
Cohasset coach Torin Sweeney

"Graden beat a kid from Foxboro who had beaten him in the Sectional last year," Sweeney said. "That win should help his seeding this weekend."

Derek Froio also won three matches.

"Derek had an exciting match with Brandon Kim (Hingham)," Sweeney said. "He had a takedown with five seconds left in the match. He won 8-7."

Sweeney had praise for Greg Berube.

"Greg has been wrestling well at 112," he said. "He's a sophomore."

Heading into the Individual Sectionals, Sweeney is expecting solid returns from a number of wrestlers.

"I think Alex Kinnealey at 215, Thomas Flibotte at 171, Derek Froio at 152 and Gus Helbock (119) should have a shot at a No. 1 or 2 seed," Sweeney said. "They all have a good chance of going to States. We also have a lot of kids who are on the bubble for making States. They'll have a chance if they wrestle well. The top four in each class go. You really have to wrestle well. You can't have an off day."

As for the Hingham match, Sweeney felt the difference was an injury to one of his top wrestlers.

"Justin Yeager was out with an injury," he said. "Justin had been 10-0 in dual meets and 17-4 on the year. It was a tough loss losing him. If we had him against Hingham it might have been different. If we had won that, we could have been wrestling Triton (in the Div. 3 semifinals). Pembroke was missing kids (to suspension) and we could have beaten them."

Sweeney said Pembroke's missing wrestlers made a big difference.

"It opened the door for everyone," he said. "During the preseason coaches all talked about how whoever was the healthiest would do well in Sectionals."

GYMNASTICS

Cohasset/Norwell springs to second place

By Ryan Wood
RWOOD@CNC.COM

The Cohasset/Norwell gymnastics team capped off a great season with an impressive performance Saturday at the All-League Meet in Somerset.

The Skipper Clippers finished second overall, one place behind Hingham/Scituate. Plymouth North/South finished third overall, followed by Bridgewater-Raynham in fourth, Silver Lake/Pembroke in fifth, Brockton in sixth, and Nantucket in seventh.

The team shined on the uneven bars. That's where both Melinda Dignam and Christina Tedeschi achieved personal bests. Meanwhile, Amber Silvia scored an 8.2 on the bars, and Sam Sprague earned an 8.10.

On the floor, Sprague scored an 8.60 to lead the team. She was followed by Silvia (8.2), Tedeschi (7.8), Micaela Durkin (7.5), Abby Smith (7.3), and Dignam (7.1). Sprague also finished with an 8.35 pm the balance beam and an 8.20 on the vault. Silvia scored an 8.25 on the vault and a 7.80 on the beam. Also on the beam, which was the first event of the day, Smith had a 7.20, followed by Tedeschi (7.0) and Dignam (7.15). Sam Casey scored a 7.4 on the vault, and in the same event, Carly Schwantner and Emily Kuhn both scored a 7.2.

The Cranberry Gymnastics Conference award ceremony was also held, and captain Sam Sprague finished in first place in the all-around. Silvia finished second in the all-around. Tedeschi, who's only a freshman, came in third on the floor exercise. Cohasset/Norwell also had two league all-stars – Sprague (all-around) and Silvia (floor exercise).

The season may not be over just yet. The team is waiting to see if any of the gymnasts have qualified for the state competition.

SPORTS ROUNDUP

A huge week all around

By William Wassersug
WWASSERS@CNC.COM

It was a big week throughout the Cohasset sports world and the fun is still yet to come with a full slate of action over the weekend.

To start, the Cohasset hockey team has qualified to return to the MIAA Tournament, and beaten arch-rival Norwell.

The wrestling team will be in action this weekend and the boys basketball team will battle for a South Shore League title.

Cohasset boys basketball coach Bo Ruggiero calls his team's style of play fastball based on their non-stop pressure.

So far this season, the press, hard work and talented players have helped the Skippers to a 13-1 record, 11-1 South Shore League, and a legitimate shot at a South Shore League title.

In their last two games, Cohasset beat league rival Carver 90-80 in overtime and followed with a 60-54 win at Rockland on Tuesday at home.

That sets up a huge game tonight against Norwell, who will bring big-man Nick Volpe and his 19 ppg average.

When Cohasset beat Norwell on the road in January, Volpe sat out sick.

"This is a huge contest because of what Norwell brings," Ruggiero said. "The kids are looking forward to it. It is an exciting time. The kids are playing with passion and heart."

Cohasset pretty much needs a win tonight to keep their hope of a South Shore League title alive, as they're tied in the loss column with Mashpee in the chase.

Cohasset hosts Mashpee Feb. 18.

Before that, they have Norwell and Harwich on Monday night.

One of those games could be a milestone night for Robert Jones, who is getting close to the 1,000-point mark.

In the Carver game, Shane Haggerty had a breakout night with 27 points, including 16 in the first half. He hit a three-pointer at the halftime buzzer that gave the Skippers a seven-point advantage.

Robbie Mahoney added 20 points while dominating inside.

Jones notched 19 points and Sam Richardson scored 11. Kyrel Jaundoo dropped 9 and Chris Murphy scored 4.

WEEK 8

Hoop it up

After yet another winter storm, Week 8 of high school basketball on the South Shore was a bit incomplete. However most teams got at least a game in and with the make-up games piling up the last few weeks of the regular season should be exciting. Brenna Diggins of Norwell picked up another double-double, her 17th straight.

Scituate boys beat Randolph, 77-63, and John Foster led the way with 20 points and 13 rebounds.

Barrett Murphy had 34 points as Marshfield stunned New Bedford, 88-86, in (2 OTs)

SPORTS ROUNDUP

A huge week all around

FROM ROUNDUP, PAGE 17

The game got tougher than expected when Carver outscored the Skippers 31-14 in the fourth quarter to force overtime.

In the extra minutes, Cohasset took control at the free throw line, making 8-of-9 shots. Jones scored 6 in the frame.

The win gave Cohasset a sweep over Carver.

Against Rockland, it was another big game.

"We had a big game with a capacity crowd," Ruggiero said. "It was a great atmosphere."

Jones had 26 points to lead everyone. Among his 26 were four three-pointers.

Richardson drained 16 and Jaundoo added 8. Mahoney and Haggerty both had four points and Joe Buckley and Murphy came off the bench and played well off the boards while putting in a bucket each.

On the girls side, Cohasset will look to rebound from a 46-45 loss at Rockland on Tuesday, and avenge a 45-43 loss to Norwell in January tonight at 6:30 p.m. at Norwell. The girls follow with a home game against Nantucket on Sunday at 3:30 p.m. in a rematch of last year's Div. 4 Sectional Final.

Carli Haggerty scored 20 points in the Rockland game to lead Cohasset.

On Friday night, Cohasset beat Carver 61-30 and celebrated coach John LeVangie's 800th career victory after the game.

Cohasset can still get a share of the league title, but needs to beat Norwell and get a Norwell upset loss to Harwich.

Still, Cohasset checks in with a stellar 14-2 record and will have a chance to defend their Div. 4 State Championship.

On the ice, the boys hockey team accomplished a big goal by qualifying for the MIAA Tournament.

Cohasset missed out by a point last year.

The Skippers (10-3-1) had a huge 4-2 win over Norwell and played first-place Abington/East Bridgewater Thursday night.

They'll be back on the ice on Saturday night at 8 p.m. at Weymouth's Connell Rink for Senior Night.

Finally, Cohasset swimmers Clarke Indek and Hope Kissick qualified for the MIAA South Sectionals at MIT this weekend along with two of Cohasset girls relay teams.

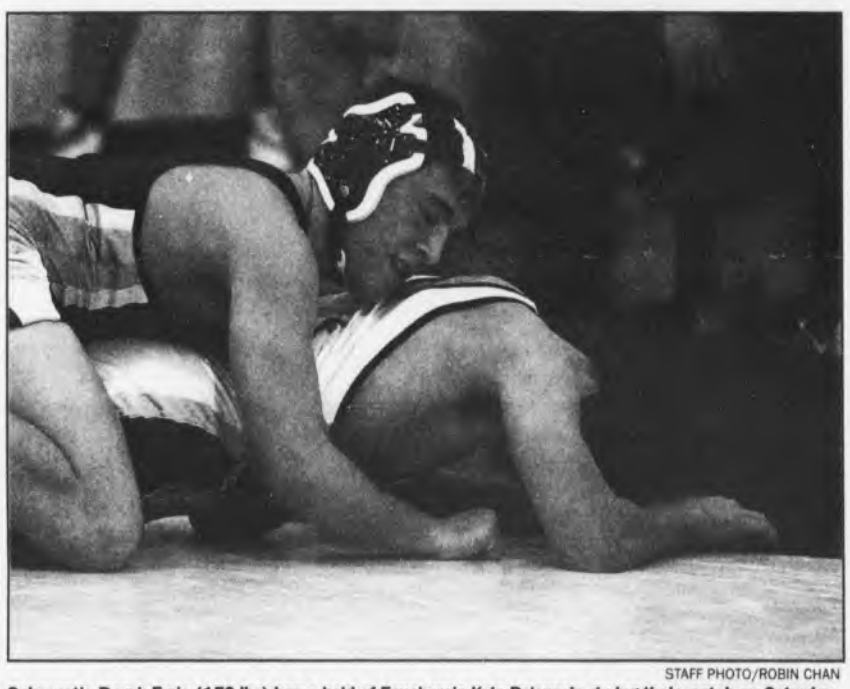
While he was down about not picking up the win, Sweeney was pleased that neighboring Hingham capitalized.



"It was good for (Hingham first-year head coach Paul Canniff) Paul," Sweeney said. "He's done a lot of work."

Cohasset finished the regular dual-meet season 13-8-1 with a young lineup.

"When Justin got hurt that left us with two seniors," That bodes well for the future."

As for this weekend, Sweeney is excited.

"It's going to be a dogfight," he said. "We have the weekend than States in Holliston."

CAMP, SCHOOL AND ACTIVITIES DIRECTORY

TEN REASONS WHY YOUR CHILD NEEDS A SUMMER CAMP EXPERIENCE Part 2

By Bette Bussel, Executive Director, American Camp Association, New England

Part 2 - continued from last week's Camp Directory article

There's no doubt that summer camp can have a profound impact on a child's life. Kids get to sing silly songs, play funny games, swim in lakes, and tell spooky stories around a campfire; this is the image of camp that has been captured and memorialized in films, books, and television programs. The truth is there is much more to a camp experience then fun and games. For the last century and a half, experiential education in summer camp settings has played an integral role in children's overall development – cognitive, physical, and social-emotional. Here are the last five (of ten) reasons why your child shouldn't miss out on a unique growth experience at day or overnight camp--or both!

6. Safe new adventures – At camp your child is supervised by trained professionals who ensure their safety while inspiring them to try new things.

7. Greater self-reliance, self-sufficiency, and self-confidence – In addition to learning how to take responsibility for themselves, their space, and their belongings, campers often discover strengths that they never knew existed through various activities and experiences. Being at camp is independence boosting.

8. Positive risk-taking – Camp provides a safe, wholesome, judgment-free environment for your child to step out of their own comfort zone to take physical and emotional risks that they would not attempt under other circumstances.

9. A strong sense of community – Life at camp, with its group, team, and individual experiences, teaches children how to work together for a common goal and to find their place and voice within a group. Children experience a sense of belonging in at summer camp. And they are correct. Summer camp is exactly where children belong!

10. Memories that will last a lifetime – Camp memories live on in children's hearts and minds long after the summer ends.

Cohasset Youth Travel Basketball roundup

Two straight for G-5 girls

The Cohasset 5th Grade Girls Travel basketball team won its second straight contest and third in its last four starts with a 19-12 triumph over Hingham Sunday afternoon at the Cohasset High gym.

As was the case in last week's 24-9 win over Hanover, the Fledgling Fifths got off to a fast start and never looked back. Zoe Doherty took a pass from Mary Catherine Crumley on a set play and drove past her defender for the first bucket of the game. Crumley and Doherty then worked a give-and-go on another set play in which Crumley sank a bucket in the lane to make it 4-0.

Doherty hit one of two free throws moments later to make it 5-0 in the opening minutes and Cohasset went on to build a lead of 11-4 at the intermission. Hingham threatened to make a game of it when the Hingham visitors drew to within 13-10 in the third period, but baskets by Crumley and Emma Loft staved off any hopes of a Hingham comeback bid.

Both teams pressed full court in the final two minutes, but a pair of steals and length of the court dashes by Kate Quigley, the latter culminating in a pass to Leanne Hayden for a bucket at the buzzer, sealed the 19-12 triumph.

The victory the week before over Hanover was keyed by an early outburst by Elle Hansen, who got the Fledgling Fifths off and running with a lay-in off the opening tap and two successive steals and breakaway layups for a quick-as-a-flash 6-0 Cohasset lead in the first two minutes of play. Elle also added a bucket later on a set play to give her eight points on the day to lead her team in the scoring department.

Both the Hingham and Hanover victories proved to be total team efforts with all of the Cohasset 5th graders playing roles in the triumphs. Lauren Cunning made two nice drives for hoops in the opening half of the Hanover contest; Margaret Norton and Kate Fitzpatrick each tingled the twine to get onto the scoresheet against Hanover; Aidan Chamberlain was a force on the boards against Hingham; and Mary Tarpey, Kendall McConnaughey, Bridget Desjourdy, and Kate McGowan played strong defense and battled hard for loose balls.

The Cohasset girls teams travel to Norwell Saturday.

G-5 boys undefeated

The Cohasset 5th grade boys team is having a very strong season. The boys started the season by winning a tournament at Mass Premier in Foxboro and have played extremely well in three prestigious tournaments, playing elite teams from Massachusetts, New Jersey and Connecticut.

The team is currently undefeated in the Abington Stars League.

"This is a wonderful group of boys who have now been playing together for three seasons," said their coaches. "They work very hard to improve each and every day and they are all very committed to the great game of basketball."

The team's captains are Chase Bomeisler and Will Bowen. Team members include Tommy Carrabes, Will Greer, Kyle McFetridge, Sean McElhinney, Charlie Pyne, Jackson Roberts, Nick Slamp, Andrew Sullivan, Will Thomas and Deven Varney.

The team is coached by Paul Bowen and Joe Carrabes. Lissie Bomeisler serves as Team Mom.

Cohasset's Kelly named Maine Rookie of the Week in women's basketball

Bates College first-year guard Meredith Kelly was named Maine Rookie of the Week on Tuesday by the Maine Women's Basketball Coaches Association.

Kelly scored 11 points in Bates' 69-49 win over Wesleyan on Friday night, then posted 15 points in an 86-59 triumph over Connecticut College on Saturday. On the week she averaged 13 points, four rebounds, one assist, and two steals per game. Kelly was 10-for-19 from the floor and 6-for-8 from the charity stripe for the week.

Over the week, Kelly rose to eighth in the NESCAC in field goal percentage on the season, at .481. Through six NESCAC games, she ranks second in conference games with a .514 field goal percentage.

It is the second time this season that Kelly has claimed Maine Rookie of the Week honors. She also won the award on Dec. 6, 2010.

Kelly and the Bobcats (16-5, 4-2 NESCAC) travel to Trinity on Friday night (8 p.m.) and play at Amherst on Saturday at 4 p.m.

Bates is ranked No. 6 in the Div. 3 East.

Get a taste of the college experience this summer

By Jim Martinho
GUEST COLUMNIST

Looking to stand out from the crowd in the college admission process? Try a pre-college summer program. You'll get a taste of campus life, explore interesting subjects, and build lasting relationships with peers and professors.

College admission officers love applicants who challenge themselves and push their boundaries, both inside and outside the classroom. As students spend the school year balancing a rigorous course schedule on top of extracurricular activities, athletics, test preparation and – almost forgot – a social life, summer pre-college academic programs offer invaluable opportunities to take advanced courses and make use of resources not available in most high schools.

And with most application deadlines set several months before programs begin, it's never too early to start planning your summer.

Why attend a pre-college summer program?

Summer academic programs allow high school students to:

➤ Explore specialized subjects from archaeology to veterinary medicine, or learn a foreign language not offered in your high school's curriculum.

➤ Preview careers in fields like business, engineering and government through pre-professional programs that combine course work with career seminars, guest speakers and field trips to work sites.

➤ Earn transferable college credit and save on undergraduate tuition.

➤ Develop the independence and time-management skills necessary to ease the transition from high school to college.

➤ Build confidence in your academic abilities and demonstrate that you can handle college-level work.

Programs held on college campuses can be a valuable tool in the college search process, providing prospective applicants with an in-depth look at academic and student life.

Although a few colleges guarantee admission or award scholarships to students who complete a summer program on campus, most programs explicitly state that attendance does not improve your odds of undergraduate admission. However, spending a week or more living in dormitories and meeting students and professors will help you better articulate your reasons for wanting to attend when it's time to fill out that application. Or you might find that your dream college isn't so dreamy after all.

Which summer program is right for you?

The first step in selecting a summer program should be discussing your plans with your guidance counselor and family. Decide whether location or subject material is more important to you, if you'd like to attend a residential or commuter program, and how many weeks of the summer you'll have available; session lengths range from two-day conferences to eight weeks or more. Keep in mind that the most valuable summer programs will offer opportunities that aren't available in your high school.

It's important to establish your family's budget, as summer tuition costs run as high as several thousand dollars. Merit- or need-based financial aid may help defray program costs, and some funded programs are offered tuition-free. Admission to free programs is usually very competitive and may be limited to in-state residents or students from underrepresented backgrounds. Paid internships with business or science research facilities offer high-achieving students opportunities to earn a salary or stipend.

Academic programs are conducted by boarding schools, major research universities, smaller two- and four-year colleges, and private companies. Boarding schools offer a preview of dormitory living on small campuses and course material geared towards high school students. Colleges and university programs offer a higher degree of social freedom and less structured course work; programs participants are treated like college students and often enroll in introductory-level classes alongside undergraduates. Private companies operate programs on various boarding school and college campuses, but instructors usually are not affiliated with the school.

Applying to summer programs – it's never too early to start

Summer program application deadlines range from the fall of the previous year for the most selective programs, to others with rolling admission or open enrollment that accept students until programs are filled. Some programs, such as state Governor's Schools, require guidance counselors or principals to nominate students.

Applying to selective summer programs provides a small-scale preview of the college application process, requiring applicants to submit high school transcripts, standardized test scores, teacher recommendations, and one or more essays or writing samples. Prerequisites for admission may include minimum GPA or PSAT/SAT scores, and some programs conduct phone or in-person interviews with applicants.

You'll want to get started early to allow your teachers plenty of time to complete recommendations, and to give yourself time to fine-tune your essays and make sure materials are complete. And don't let a rejection letter from that prestigious first-choice program get you down – apply to a few less selective programs, take a course online or at a local community college, or volunteer at a local service organization.

How college is different from high school

By Jennifer Klein
and Alicia LaPolla
GUEST COLUMNISTS

In the movie "Old School," Luke Wilson and Vince Vaughn start a fake fraternity just so they can relive their college experience. To keep their status as a student organization, they must excel in a wide range of tasks that prove they are true college students. They master everything from academics to community service.

Although the tale is just a movie, and you shouldn't believe everything you hear, sometimes Hollywood gets a few things right. College really is the best time of your life.

It is a time to be involved in everything your college or university will have to offer. When you reach your 30s, you will likely look back at your college experience and wish you really could do it all over again.

College is a time when the "cool kids" disappear. Who you eat lunch with does not define you as a person. There is no such thing as "un-cool." Welcome to college, where you are now considered an adult.

Getting used to your first year

Being a first-year student is fun. Unlike high school, where your first year is usually filled with anxiety and the occasional wrong-classroom mishap, colleges prepare first-year students with an orientation that builds a strong bond among class members. Many colleges offer additional early orientation programs – usually a camping trip or gathering hosted in a nearby city – to foster relationships before the school year even begins.

Attend as many orientations options as possible. It will make your college transition easier if you already have bonds with your classmates. Once orientation is over and the upper-class students are back on campus, you will find that they are excited to meet the first-year students, and you become very comfortable in the college setting very quickly.

The learning environment

Get used to saying "professor" or "doctor." Your teachers are no longer Mr. or Ms. Brown, but Professor or Dr. Brown, and guess what? You are expected to have an opinion! You are no longer a passive learner who just sits and listens to a teacher, occasionally writes a paper, and takes a test in which you are expected to simply reiterate what you have learned or been told by the teacher.

You will not be provided with notes; rather, you are expected to figure out on your own what's important. (Professors are available during their office hours for help if what's important is ever unclear.)

In college, your professors are expecting you to voice your thoughts, and disagreeing with the professor's opinion is considered an interesting debate, not deviant behavior.

Class participation and providing your own perspective and analysis are key to success in the college learning environment.

Your social life

Balancing your academic and social lives is difficult. This balance is something that most likely your parents helped you with in high school. Now that you are in college, you can no longer rely on your parents for structure, rules or academic motivation. All of these are now in your hands.

Being at college can be socially overwhelming – an array of evening and weekend activities is open to you including lectures, club/organization events, formals, dorm events and, of course, parties.

In addition, many students go to school in a locale they have not lived in before, so a lot of time is spent exploring your new surroundings. Some students become so involved in social activities that they neglect their academics.

While it is good to explore new surroundings and take advantage of social opportunities, it is imperative that you cut out time to focus on your studies. Some students find it helpful to spend studying time in the school library, where they can focus without any interruption. Forming study groups with peers from your classes can also be extremely helpful, as well as agreeing on a daily "study time" with your roommate, where your dorm room will adopt the atmosphere of the library. And speaking of whom ...

Roommates

Many high school students have their own bedrooms. If high-school students do share a room, it is usually with a sibling, not a stranger. Unless you are coming from boarding school, you most likely will need to adapt to life with roommate.

Although some think having a roommate is an infringement on privacy, a roommate is actually a great benefit in college. The first few weeks of college can be a lonely time – you are in a new place with new surroundings. A roommate can keep you company and will help you adapt to college life because you are adapting together. You immediately have someone who can go to the dining hall with you, explore the campus with you, help you find a class location, and share your social network.

In addition, with a roommate you can share the costs of college life. You and your roommate can figure out who can bring what into the dorm room, and you can split groceries, additional furnishings and other costs.

Culture

If you are from anywhere other than a big city, most of your friends are probably a lot like you. You may not all share the same personality, but the things you consider "normal" are probably the same. Your parents are probably a lot like your friends' parents. They probably even share the same tax bracket. You go to the same type of restaurants as your friends. You and your friends probably share similar ideas of what is fun to do on a Friday night.

You choose how to balance your academic and social life. You make all of your own decisions, and you are responsible for the consequences.

Until you get to college, it rarely occurs to you that life could be any different – until you find yourself surrounded by hundreds of students just like you, with very different stories. You quickly learn that "normal" simply doesn't exist.

One of the best things about going to college is the opportunity to interact with a wide variety of cultures. Students from the other side of the world and the other side of the county will likely both be living on your dorm floor. Take advantage of this amazing multicultural environment that you might never have access to again.

What to eat – avoid The Freshman 15

In high school, most likely your parent or guardian did most of the grocery shopping and cooking. Eating healthy was not something that you needed to think about because somebody else was buying and cooking the healthful food.

Once in college, you have a wide variety of healthful and unhealthful foods to choose from every meal. Buffets of desserts are offered for both lunch and dinner. Empty carbohydrate snacks are usually staples of a dorm room. People make jokes about the "Freshmen 15," but it is reality for many students.

Less important than the weight gain is the unhealthful diet. Remember that it is very easy to eat healthfully while at college; you just need to make that effort. There are just as many nutritious foods in dining halls as there are junk foods. You need to make the decision to eat healthfully on your own.

Making your own choices

When you are in high school, your parents are often there to stand between you and temptations. Once parents are removed from the equation, you are left with you and your choices. Just because your parents said you cannot do something does not mean you cannot do it. However, this is where personal choice and responsibility come in.

Once you are in college, in many ways you are considered an adult and you have more opportunities to be sexually active. You might have been exposed to some of these things in high school, but the "barrier" of your parents' rules (or boarding-school regulations) made decisions easier.

You choose how to balance your academic and social life. You make all of your own decisions, and you are responsible for the consequences. You choose whether or not you are comfortable with drinking, drugs and/or sex.

Remember that being an adult does not mean you need to figure everything out by yourself. Gathering information about these and other decisions, and talking to parents, siblings and friends can help you make these important decisions.

Most campuses also have counselors and health care workers available to provide information and a listening ear. (And, of course you can also ask your roommate.)

Debate team continues to be amazing

LIFE AT CHS

NATALIE DIGNAM

Senior team Greta Shwachman and Emily Toomey continued their undefeated season with another win, making their record 6-0.

Hello CHS! After so many snow days, only a half-day this week seems like kind of a let down, but we can't get use to all the sleeping late and fun shoveling. Anyway, were back for a full week so here's what's been going on:

This Wednesday, the debate team went to Hingham. Senior team Greta Shwachman and Emily Toomey continued their undefeated season with another win, making their record 6-0. Their record is just one example of the many successes of the debate team this season, which included wins by seniors Tara Goodwin and Rhiana Fitts and juniors Julia Canney and Morgan McCarthy.

This Sunday the Middle School Spelling Bee will be held in the high school auditorium. The Spelling Bee is a tradition at CHS that NHS (National Honor Society) students are glad to support by decorating and ushering. Also this week, the International Club will have a mandatory meeting this Friday during lunch. And coming soon, NHS will take a new approach to the Student Advisory Period, a meeting period that began last year to help students through high school by assigning each class a teacher for all four years. Every month, the class meets to discuss difficulties they may be facing, including college, bullying, and time management.

Next month, members of NHS (all seniors) hope to advise the juniors on the difficulties of the college search. Maybe we've all had so many presentations on college, for parents or teachers or students, we forget what it's really like to go through a process that changes so rapidly from year to year and is specific to each student.

Lastly, the Valentine's addition of the Spinnaker will be coming out next Friday, so don't forget your dollar!

Natalie Dignam is a senior at CHS. Her column appears weekly during the school year.

Spelling Bee fundraiser set for Feb. 13

The Cohasset Education Foundation will be offering its fourth annual Children's Spelling Bee fundraiser on Sunday, Feb. 13. All children in grades two to five are welcome to participate in this fun, community event. Each team is made up of three children in the same grade. Team members could be from class, a sports team, or a Cohasset resident in another school.

Registration, including a tee shirt and medal, is $25 per speller. Forms can be downloaded at www.cohasseteducation.org.

Student artwork at State Transportation Building

The Gold Key and Silver Key students will exhibit their work at the State Transportation Building, 10 Park Plaza, Boston from Monday, Feb. 14 to Thursday, April 7. The hours are Monday through Friday, 9: a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday, noon to 4 p.m. The building is closed on Saturdays and holidays. Groups planning to visit the exhibit need to call the office to arrange an assigned time. The Awards Day in Boston is March 6.

Cohasset High School senior Mollie Sinclaire was selected as a recipient of the Gold Key Award for the Boston Globe Scholastic Art and Writing Awards for her photography piece titled "Burano."

The students listed below were selected as Honorable Mentions at The Boston Globe Scholastic Art and Writing Awards.

Right now, our Thermal Leak Detector Analysis is FREE

During our Winter Window Diagnosis, our Thermal Leak Detectors:

- Use an infrared thermometer to help find those energy-wasting cold spots.
- Identify your most drafty windows, so you can then choose the six you want replaced and SAVE $1,000.
- Are most effectively used in the cold months, therefore schedule your FREE Thermal Leak Detector Analysis now.

During the winter, nobody wants to replace all of their windows, but for a limited time, save $1,000 when you replace just your six most-drafty windows.

And our Thermal Leak Detector Analysis will help identify your six worst windows—the ones you hate because they make your house so cold!

Most people don't realize that winter is actually one of the smartest times of the year to have new replacement windows installed. In the frigid, dry air, the wood framing surrounding your windows completely contracts, thereby creating the largest window frame openings. Your windows are then custom built to those specific dimensions and will have the tightest fit possible when installed.

REPLACE YOUR 6 WORST WINDOWS AND SAVE $1,000

Horoscope

SALOME'S STARS FOR RELEASE WEEK OF FEB. 21, 2011

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) Time is on your side in the early part of the week. But anything left undone by midweek will need to be put into rush mode. The weekend offers choices for you and someone special.

TAURUS (April 30 to May 20) Finally getting credit for a contribution is nice for all you idea-generating Ferdinands and Fernandas. But don't sit on your laurels under the cork tree. Use it as a first step to a bigger opportunity.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) Despite the progress made, a hint of doubt might set in. That's OK. You need to stop and consider not only what you're doing but also how you are doing. Make adjustments where needed.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) The dreamer is dominant in the Moon Child's aspect, but a dollop of hardheaded practicality is coming up fast and jockeying for space. The challenge is to make room for both modes.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) It's a good week for Leos and Leonas to start assessing what they've done and what they plan to do. Moving to a new environment — home or job-related — is a possibility for some Cats.

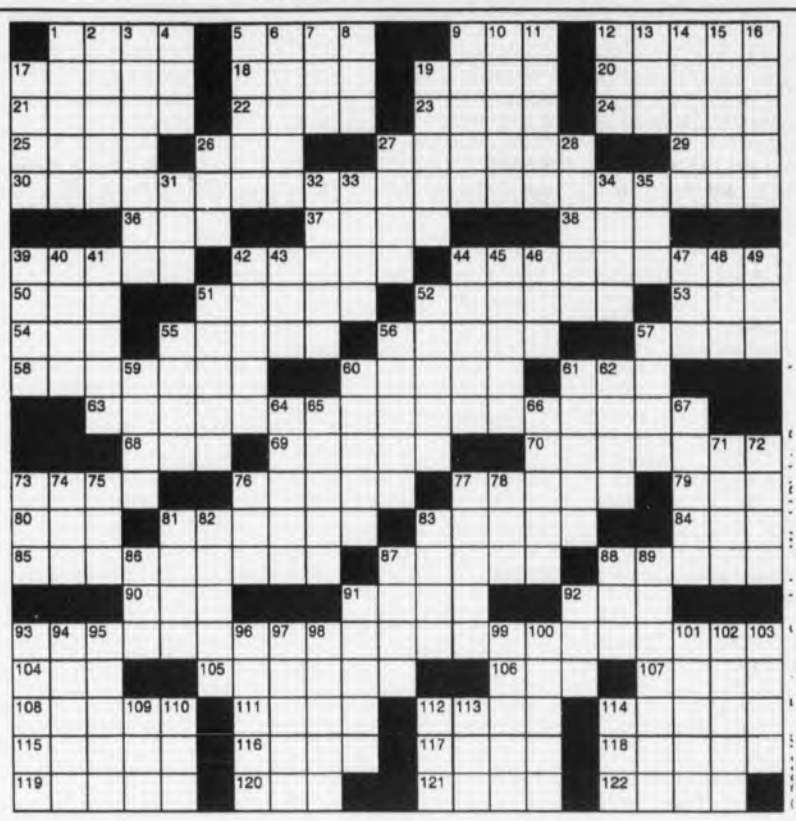
VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) The week calls for Virgos to make tough decisions, but in a way that leaves the door open for changes. Ask for advice from someone who has been in the position you're in now.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) Disappointments are never easy to take, but you have the ability to learn from them and go on to success. Meanwhile, continue to build up your contacts. You'll need them soon.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) Things might still be going much too slowly to suit you. But you need the time to make sure they're going in the right direction. It's easier to make a course correction now rather than later.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) Showing some temperament at the way things are going is one way of getting your point across. Just don't overdo it, or you risk turning away more-moderate supporters.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) Things could change more quickly this week than you like. But don't fret; you'll most likely find that you're up to the challenges. The weekend offers much-needed relaxation.



AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) Big challenge coming up? Uncross those fingers and believe that you're going to do well. And keep in mind that so many people have faith in your ability to succeed.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) Testing the waters is a good way of learning about an opportunity before plunging right in. Ask more questions and be alert to any attempts to avoid giving complete answers.

Fun By The Numbers

Like puzzles? Then you'll love sudoku. This mind-bending puzzle will have you hooked from the moment you square off, so sharpen your pencil and put your sudoku savvy to the test!

Here's How It Works:

Sudoku puzzles are formatted as a 9x9 grid, broken down into nine 3x3 boxes. To solve a sudoku, the numbers 1 through 9 must fill each row, column and box. Each number can appear only once in each row, column and box. You can figure out the order in which the numbers will appear by using the numeric clues already provided in the boxes. The more numbers you name, the easier it gets to solve the puzzle!

Dialed in to classic radio

Step back in time as actors recreate episodes of 'Dragnet' and more

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

Before there was "Law & Order" and its many incarnations, or "CSI" in all its cities, there was "Dragnet," a classic police drama series created and produced by its iconic star Jack Webb. Set in Los Angeles, the series ran, in various radio and television versions, between 1947 and 1970. This Friday night, Massasoit Radio Players will present classic radio episodes of "Dragnet" – featuring the adventures of Sergeant Joe Friday – in a Music and Comedy Dinner Theatre production at the Conference Center on Massasoit's Brockton campus.

True crime stories where only the names have been changed to protect the innocent won't be the only ones heard during the program, which benefits Massasoit Community College scholarship programs. The evening will also feature live recreations of other classic radio programs including the comedies "The Bickersons" and "Duffy's Tavern," performed by WBZ Radio's Jordan Rich and several Massasoit Radio Players from the South Shore including Ed Krasnow of Weymouth, Rosie Carey of Abington, Elizabeth Morrell of Randolph, Kevin Tocci of Duxbury, and Rolly Blanchette of Avon, a founding member of the company and its current co-producer, director, and stage manager.

Elizabeth Morrell

Rosie Carey

"Massasoit Radio Players is a spin-off of Radio/TV Classics, a series of programs that was started about 25 years ago by Bob Bowers, a professor of speech at Massasoit, who pulled together staff, secretaries, and faculty members to recreate old radio shows for Massasoit TV," explained Blanchette by telephone last week. "Using old radio scripts, we began doing Radio Classics live on stage 20 years ago. We not only have a wonderful acting company, but we also have terrific special effects people who do their thing, right where everyone can see it. Our approach has evolved over time and now we do the shows in an intimate setting with the goal of creating a cabaret-style environment that we think is just right for showcasing old-time radio."

Blanchette, a professor of social science at Massasoit and an actor with local film, television, and community theater credits, says it is easy to understand why radio shows from the 1930's and '40s still resonate with today's audiences.

"The shows were beautifully written and that has made it easy for them to stand the test of time."

Massasoit Radio Players' Music and Comedy Dinner Theatre will be presented at the Conference Center at Massasoit Community College, 770 Crescent St., Brockton, on Feb. 11. For tickets and information, call 508-427-1234 or go online at Massasoit.edu.

Bowen joins Discovery crew

Launch set for next Thursday

By Jill Michaels
CORRESPONDENT

When Cohasset native Steve Bowen served as an astronaut family escort at the November launch attempt of STS-133, he had no clue that he would be sitting inside space shuttle Discovery for its next launch attempt.

NASA delivered that surprise news to Bowen after STS-133 astronaut Tim Kopra was injured in a bicycle accident on Jan. 15 — one week after the wife of STS-134 astronaut Mark Kelly, US Rep. Gabrielle Giffords, was wounded in Tucson.

With only six weeks' advance notice for

Princess Sharon reigns over parties

Cohasset mom owns party planning business

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Sharon Chase was eight years old when she received her first tutu as a gift.

It was glittery and pink with a sparkly silver bodice.

She absolutely adored it.

Despite many years and changes that little girl who loved that tutu is very much alive and well inside Chase — or Princess Sharon, as she is called in certain circles.

In part it was her love of all things pink, fluffy, sparkly and princess that led her to start her own business, Princess Sharon, doing custom parties and events for children.

"I've always been very girly. Anything fancy, glittery and colorful I am drawn to," Chase said in her home this week.

Her business, Princess Sharon Events, is the convergence of her talents, skills and passions. A trained vocalist and educator, Chase, 36, incorporates age-appropriate music, crafts and positive learning into each one of her parties.

"My dream is to bring music and movement to every birthday," Chase said.

Chase does four to six parties a month and books parties three to four months in advance. She does parties in people's homes or at venues. She balances owning her own business with being a mom to daughter Aizza, 5 and Zander, 7.

If desired, she'll plan a party from a theme to menu planning to dress-up costumes to customized invitations — and of course arrive to host the event in

Senior Center

Updated information given to Selectmen

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

If a senior center is to become a reality in the next few years the town needs to begin making forward steps.

On Tuesday night, Cohasset Elder Affairs representatives were back before the Board of Selectmen for an update and discussion of the estimated cost of the project.

In the fall, a feasibility study, which was paid for through private fundraising of the Friends of Elder Affairs, was completed. The study envisions a 16,000 square foot building with room for four, one-bedroom senior affordable housing apartment units. The senior center portion of the building would include a computer lab, a clinic, a social day care center, small offices, a large meeting hall, and a variety of activity rooms.

The building, including the structure and furnishings, is estimated to cost $5.93 million.

Cohasset Elder Affairs have named several sources to make up this total. The Social Service League of Cohasset has pledged $1 million to the project through the Mary Hooper Trust. Community preservation funding has been targeted for $1 million for the affordable housing portion of the project. About $1.5 million is the goal for

Cohasset supports veterans

Selectmen adopt military covenant

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Any attendee of Cohasset's Memorial Day observances knows that Cohasset is a community that values and honors its veterans. On Tuesday night, the Board of Selectmen made a further step in recognizing the importance of supporting veterans and their families.

The Selectmen adopted the Massachusetts Military Community Covenant on behalf of the town. The covenant further highlights the community's commitment to advocating and building partnerships that support the strength of military families, which in turn support the military member.

Elder Affairs director Coral Grande, Police chief Mark DeLuca, Sons of the American Legion commander Tom Wigmore, Veterans services director Joe McElroy and retired Colonel Edward Graham, president of the Mass Bay Association of the US Army, brought the covenant forward.

"The covenant is free to the town and we will be the first town south of Boston to sign it," Graham said. Several communities near Fort Devens and towns on the North Shore have signed the resolution. "This is simply the town declaring we are committed to caring for our veterans."

The community covenant program is an Army program, but includes recognition of all service members and their families.

More than simply a piece of paper, the group hopes to use the covenant to make a real difference with veterans and their families.

"I hope this can be a springboard to other things," Grande said. Several further initiatives include establishing discounts for local veterans at shops in town and developing additional programs for veterans returning home.

"To me, this covenant is a no brainer. Supporting our veterans is an obvious thing to do," said Chief DeLuca, adding he has two sons in the Marines who head overseas in the spring.

The group that brought forth the covenant will also act as a support network for Veterans Agent Joe McElroy who works so closely with the town's veterans and their families.

Selectmen chair Karen Quigley said she was heartened to hear concrete ideas on how the town will put the covenant's message to work.

"This should be about more than signing a piece of paper," Quigley said.

Although the Board of Selectmen voted to sign the covenant and put their signature on a photocopy, the town manager's office is preparing an official copy with the town seal for a formal signing within the next few weeks. The covenant will then go to the State House.

Briefly

Special Town Meeting warrant

The Special Town Meeting scheduled for Monday, March 14 will have one article. The article will deal with covering the $265,000 deficit found in the water department's budget during the recent audit. If approved, the article will ask for a transfer from the stabilization fund to the water department's budget.

In a change from past practice the special town meeting will be held in the high school auditorium. Interim town manager Steve Lombard said he looked up historical data on the attendance at special town meetings over the past few years. Only one had close to 500 attendees, a number the auditorium can handle.

Lombard did have some concerns with the one article warrant in getting a 100-citizen quorum.

"It is an important meeting to be at, if we don't (approve the article) the tax bills won't go out again," Lombard said.

Knox-Box rapid entry system

The Fire Department spoke this week to seniors at Elder Affairs about the Knox-Box. The Knox-Box rapid entry system is a high-security key box system, designed to give Fire and EMS personnel immediate access to locked buildings, electronic gates and other secured areas.

The Knox-Box is mounted on the exterior of a home or a representative of the fire department locks building and all necessary access keys inside. Only the fire department's master key can open the box.

The Knox-Box will prevent the fire department from knocking down doors or finding other means to access the property in case of emergency.

It is up to individuals to pay for a Knox-Box. The cost is roughly $200. The fire department is working with Cohasset Elder Affairs to purchase a few boxes that can be loaned out to seniors.

"Especially if you live alone it's a great idea," Fire Chief Bob Silvia said.

More information on the Knox-Box can be found at the fire department.

Help find the next town manager

The Board of Selectmen is looking for residents willing to serve on the screening committee during the search for the next Town Manager. They are looking to put together a group that represents a cross section of interests within the town.

The screening committee will narrow the candidate field, conduct preliminary interviews and recommend a group of finalists to the Board of Selectmen.

If interested in serving on this committee, send a letter of interest to the Town Manager's Office describing your interest and specific skill set. Letters must be received by Thursday, Feb. 24 and should be sent to Board of Selectmen, 41 Highland Ave., Cohasset or send an e-mail to interim town manager Steve Lombard at slombard@townofcohasset.org.

Accounting software

One of the goals of interim Town Manager Steve Lombard is to get a new accounting software system for the town. He has invited several presenters to come show off their wares in early March.

The accounting software is a capital investment and will go before the Capital Budget Committee and will need to get approval from Town Meeting in April.

"We need to move on this," Lombard said.

If the software purchase is approved by town meeting, Lombard said he expects to have the software implemented for a clean slate start at the beginning of fiscal 2012 (July 1, 2011). It will take additional time to import all the history from the older software.

Police Beat

Three teens face drug charges

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

On Friday (Jan. 11), at about 1:55pm, the Cohasset Police Department received a call from off-duty Hingham Police Officer Thomas Ford. Officer Ford was reporting that he was at a gym on Route 3A in Cohasset and just observed three males sitting in a 1995 Blue Honda Accord in the parking lot. Ford said that he observed the males to be packaging what appeared to be marijuana in small plastic bags.

Cohasset Police Officers, along with Cohasset Detectives, responded to investigate. Officers stopped the vehicle in question on Route 3A and subsequently arrested the driver, who was identified as Todd Emanuello, 19 years of age, 49 Hull St., Cohasset, and two passengers, Joseph "Jody" Rosano, 19 years of age, 48 Howe Road, Cohasset, and a 16 year-old juvenile male from Cohasset. All three are being charged with possession of marijuana with the intent to distribute, conspiracy to violate the drug laws, and being minors in possession of alcohol.

Seized during the arrest was a quantity of marijuana, a grinder, multiple small plastic bags, vodka, and over $1000 in cash ($523 from Emanuello and $542 from Rosano). All three males were bailed and were arraigned in Quincy District Court Monday. They will be back in court later for a pretrial hearing.

Cohasset Lieutenant William Quigley praised Officer Ford's work and said, "You never know who is watching you."

Alleged rape

South Shore Hospital notified Cohasset police at about 5p.m. on Sunday (Feb. 13) that a 23-year-old woman went to the hospital and reported having been raped by an acquaintance in Cohasset. Detectives responded to the hospital and obtained a search warrant to seize evidence from the Cohasset house. Police worked through the night searching the alleged crime scene. The case remains under investigation.

Summons

A 61-year-old Pembroke woman operating a 2006 Pontiac is being summonsed to court for leaving the scene after causing property damage. Police said a 20-year-old woman from Littleton, Colo., came to the station last Wednesday (Feb. 9) to report that while the 2006 Kia Optima she was operating was parked at the post office on Ripley Road, the Pontiac struck the side of the Kia as it was backing out. While the women were talking, the Colorado woman said she needed to call her friend who owned the car about exchanging papers. She told police that the woman in the Pontiac drove off while she was trying to make that call. She provided police with the plate number of the Pontiac.

Expired registration

Police stopped a 2006 Mercedes Benz, operated by at 50-year-old Scituate man, last Tuesday (Feb. 8) on Hull Street because the plates had expired. The car was towed and the operator was issued a $100 citation, police said.

Road rage

A Hingham woman reported to police last Wednesday (Feb. 9) that a dark van operated by a man was tailgating her on Forest Avenue, police said. She reported the man appeared to have been shouting at her. She believed he may have been angry because she had sped by him earlier and wanted the incident logged.

Summons

A 34-year-old Rockland man is being summonsed to court following a traffic stop Saturday (Feb. 12) at 11:33 p.m. on Sohier Street. Police observed the 1993 Nissan Sentra he was driving roll through the stop sign at Elm Street and Cove Road and pulled him over on Sohier Street. Police said the operator produced a Brazilian driver's license but a registry check showed he was unlicensed in Massachusetts. He is being summonsed on charges of operating without a license and failure to stop at a stop sign. His car was towed.

Dog loose

A 46-year-old Cohasset woman picked up a roaming dog in her car that was loose in the village area and brought it to the police station last Wednesday (Feb. 9) where it promptly vomited all over the police station lobby and the new rug.

Police said the dog had apparently eaten something that caused it to be sick.

The Labrador-mix had a tag and its owner was contacted to come pick the dog up and will be cited by the Animal Control Officer for not having the dog under her control.

Police ask that concerned residents not bring stray dogs to the station but just give police a call from the location where the dog is roaming. Police said they are not equipped to take care of dogs at headquarters.

Suspicious man

A caller reported seeing a boy (10-12 years old) in the parking lot of the medical building off Crocker Lane last Friday (Feb. 11) at about 4:30 a.m. Investigation revealed the boy was actually a 22-year-old Hull man who was working in the building that night.

Noise bylaw

A citizen complained to police last Saturday morning (Feb. 12) at about 7:15 a.m. that there was construction going on that was creating noise. Police explained that the start time for construction work is 7 a.m. under the town bylaw, which does not differentiate for weekends.

Intoxicated couple

Curtis Liquors notified police Saturday (Feb. 12) at about 4:16 p.m. that they had refused service to a couple that appeared to be intoxicated. The couple left the store and drove off in a 1998 Chevrolet Cavalier; the store provided the plate number that came back to a woman out of North Weymouth. Hingham and Weymouth police were notified but the car was not located, police said.

Unwanted guest

Police provided a ride to the station last Saturday (Feb. 12) about 7:30 p.m., for a woman who was asked to leave a duplex; a neighbor called after hearing a verbal argument. There was no physical altercation and the woman was transported to the station where she could arrange a ride, police said.

Footprints

A concerned Gammons Road resident notified police at 10:46 a.m. on Sunday (Feb. 13) that there were footprints in the snow in her yard that go from the driveway to the lower cellar door in the back of the house. Her cellar was secure but the caller was worried about other homes as well and wanted the incident logged.

Old vandalism

Police said they were called to the site of the new Aubuchon Hardware building at 828 Chief Justice Cushing Highway last week by the property owner to view some graffiti on the back of the building. Police determined the graffiti had been there for some time and likely occurred while the building was unoccupied.

School budget gap of $300K

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

What the schools feel they need in terms of budget may not be jiving with what the town can afford.

According to School Business manager Dave DeGennaro, the schools' current draft budget is $300,000 more than what the Town Manager's office is recommending.

The current draft of the school budget for fiscal 2012 is approximately $15.732 million, which is a level services budget and a 4.64 percent increase over fiscal 2011.

According to current estimates of expected new revenue from the Town Manager's office, which assumes a $900,000 fiscal 2012 new revenues, the school should be at a budget number closer to $15.402 million. This number represents at 2.44 percent increase over fiscal 2011. The schools will receive about $368,000 of new revenues.

That leaves a gap of about $330,000.

"There will be cuts with that difference," said DeGennaro, adding the School Committee could vote a bottom-line budget number then wait for the new superintendent to come on board to made decisions.

The School Committee will hold a public hearing on their budget on Wednesday, March 2 and potentially vote on a budget. Town Meeting will have the final say on the fiscal 2012 on Saturday, April 30.

Some areas where there could be savings are not filling vacant teaching positions or an adjustment to the unemployment line item, DeGennaro said.

School Committee chair Helene Lieb said that while this news was not great, it was not as bad as they once thought. At previous meetings the potential for a $700,000 budget gap was discussed.

The School Committee as a whole has not had an in-depth discussion on how the schools will bridge the budget gap.

Lieb said the Advisory Committee would be looking to the School Committee to outline the impacts and consequences of a lower budget than initially targeted means for the school department.

School Committee member Paul Schubert made the point that the percentage split of new revenue should be looked at more closely. Currently, based on trends over the last seven fiscal years, the schools makes up roughly 61 percent of the budget and therefore receives 61 percent of new revenues (after appropriations are made to the capital stabilization fund and water/sewer indirect costs totaling about $297,000). The other town departments received 39 percent.

"The schools are getting hit harder by the loss of state and federal grants on a percentage rate (than other town departments)," Schubert said. The schools' current budget proposal assumes a loss of approximately $360,000 in the number and amount of offsets available over the current fiscal year and past years.

"This is a particularly difficult year for the schools," Schubert said, who wanted to open that discussion with the town and the selectmen.

The School Committee will hold a public hearing on their budget on Wednesday, March 2 at 7p.m.

Homestretch possible for Glut1 DS cure

Full-blown fundraising effort underway

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

This month a lot of people with a little money are joining together to make a big difference. Until the end of February, Cohasset-based charity Milestones for Children is spreading the work about its cause and its goal — a cure for a rare disease called Glut1 DS, a brain energy metabolic disorder.

In partnership with Rare Disease Day, February 28, Milestones for Children founders, Shelly Allen and Muffy Antico, initiated a 21-day campaign asking people to donate $21. Allen's son, Bobby, 8, lives with Glut1 DS.

According to researchers who have been studying the disease, a cure for Glut1 DS (glucose transporter deficiency syndrome) is within reach. A potential cure is ready to begin human trials, if funding is in place.

"We want to raise as much money as we can for research and we want to get the word out far and wide about Glut1 DS," Allen said.

The viral campaign, which is using Facebook, Twitter, e-mail and YouTube to spread like a wildfire, is off to a successful start.

In its first 10 days of the campaign the associated video has received over 1500 viewers on YouTube. People from all over the US have signed on to see the video; visitors have also come from the UK and Australia. About one in four of those visitors are opening their wallets to donate to the cause.

"The video is very upbeat and hopeful. This campaign is really about spreading awareness about Glut1 DS," Antico said. While roughly 300 children and adults have been diagnosed with the disease experts believes there are many more out there going undiagnosed, and therefore suffering needlessly.

"Through this campaign if we are able to find one child who has been misdiagnosed then it will be worth it," Antico said.

Because of the rarity of the disease, many doctors aren't even aware of its existence and as a result it has taken many families years to discover the true cause of their child's seizures and lack of development, both symptoms of Glut1 DS.

A diagnosis of Glut1 DS means your cells are not picking up and transporting glucose to the brain properly. Glucose is the principal source of fuel to the brain and without it the brain does not have what it needs to develop and grow. The only known treatment at this time is an extremely restrictive high fat diet.

Eight-year-old Bobby Allen is one of about 300 in the world diagnosed with Glut1, a neurological disorder. An early diagnosis and treatment gave Bobby the best opportunity to deal with Glut1. With proper funding, researchers could be very close to a cure for the disease.

COURTESY PHOTOS

A delayed diagnosis and treatment can lead to myriad physical and mental disabilities, ranging from mild to so severe that they cannot walk or talk.

About Milestones for Children

A partner organization to the Colleen Giblin Foundation that has supported children's neurological and cancer research since the 1980s, Milestones for Children is helping to bridge the funding gap and reach the goal of finding a cure for Glut1 DS.

Their mission is to cure one rare disease at a time. Once Glut1 DS has a cure they plan to shift their focus to another rare disease that is underfunded and neglected.

One mother's story toward her son's Glut1 DS diagnosis stretched over nine plus years and included more than 10,000 seizures, 25 EEGS and 10 MRIs. Her son underwent two CTs, two spinal taps, took nine-plus different drugs, was hospitalized countless times, visited five states, eight hospitals and 25 neurologists.

Bobby Allen, a second grader at Osgood, was diagnosed with Glut1 DS at 11 weeks old. His early diagnosis and intervention has given him the best possible outcome with the disease. Except for his diet, he is like every other boy his age.

"His story is a story of hope and a positive story," said Antico. Because of the hope inherent in his story — and his photogenic face – he is pictures on the main website of Rare Disease Day (www.rarediseaseday.us).

The research for a Glut1 DS cure is still making breakthroughs and could potentially begin human trials if funding was in place.

"The research done so far in the laboratory has shown there is a cure — and that's not true for a lot of diseases out there. That fact alone makes this a great moment in time for Glut1 DS," Allen said. A cure would likely involve a drug therapy program. "With the proper funding the doctors can continue to have meaningful breakthroughs."

Both Antico and Allen have benefited from the support of friends with particular skills and the community at large to make the Milestones for Children 21-day campaign a success.

For them, working together and building an understanding that although rare diseases are rare, no one ever has to be alone.

"It doesn't take a whole lot of money from each person if we all join together," Antico said.

Cohasset cable coming soon

After several delays and bumps in the road the Cohasset cable television should be up and running by early March. Selectman Paul Carlson, who also serves on the cable committee, reported the key piece of equipment needed for the studio was being delivered this week and will be installed the week of Feb. 28.

"We hope to have it up and running in time for special town meeting (Monday, March 14)," Carlson said. The cable committee is also working on setting up procedures for training members of community on the equipment.

Once the studio is hooked up Verizon customers, who have been without local cable for more than a year, will have access to the stations once again.

The popular local talk show "Our Town" will be back again, as well. Other members of the community have expressed interest in creating new programming.

WHAT'S THE PROBLEM?

Don't spray on me deadline March 1

EXTRA IN YOUR MARINER

Did you object to your property being sprayed with pesticides last summer in response to the outbreak of disease-carrying mosquitos? While August may seem ages away right now, if you'd like to exempt your property from spraying next summer, you must file your application by March 1.

HOW: Make your request for legal exclusion via a certified letter sent to your local town clerk's office.

WHO: The request must be made by a person living on the property or in legal control of the property.

WHAT: Include your name, address and phone number, the address of the property to be excluded and a description of the types of pesticide application programs from which you seek to be excluded.

WHEN: Your application must be received by March 1 (and you must send a new request each year).

Send again annually

THEN: You will also be required to mark every 50 feet along the boundaries of the area to be excluded, using orange surveyor's tape.

NOTE: This is the application process specified under Massachusetts Department of Agricultural Resources regulations and the town clerk is simply designated to receive your certified letter – any questions should be directed to the Plymouth County Mosquito Control Project or your local Board of Health.

Senior center ready for next steps

private fundraising through a capital campaign (including $500,000 of in-kind contributions). The remaining $2.43 million will be sought from Town Meeting through a debt exclusion override likely in spring 2012.

However, the likelihood of some of these funding sources coming through at the amount described is still to be determined.

From the audience, Stuart Ivimey, chairman of the Community Preservation Committee (CPC), expressed doubt that the town could commit a $1 million of community preservation funding to the project.

"It is mathematically possible but it would be very, very, very challenging to do that and continue to do other projects in town," Ivimey said. He estimated a $1 million bond coupled with already approved bonding would eat up nearly a quarter of the community preservation's annual funding. "That is a heck of a lot of money for the CPC to be able to do."

The proposed site of the senior center is off Sohier Street adjacent to the Cohasset Swim Center parking lot.

The senior center committee has yet to meet with the CPC as a whole. He suggested that perhaps the CPC could make a cash contribution and bond a smaller amount (less than $1million). Town Meeting has already voted to commit $225,000 to fund the architecture and engineering of the project, in particular the affordable apartments. That allocation has yet to be used.

In addition, interim Town Manager Steve Lombard said a debt exclusion override would add to the town's roughly $7.5 million in annual debt service, or about 20 percent of the total town's operating budget.

"(The town) needs to be very, very wise in continuing borrowing going forward," Lombard said.

John Campbell, president of the Friends of Cohasset Elder Affairs, said there is some level of urgency in moving the project forward as the lease with the South Shore Community Center is coming up and they expect the rent to be raised. Elder Affairs currently pays $14,000 annually for the space in the community center.

"It creates all the more urgency that we move as effectively as possible toward building a senior center," Campbell said.

On Tuesday night, the elder affairs representatives were looking for the selectmen's approval for two things: to form a building committee and to move forward with a request for proposals for a project manager.

"We need those two things to feel comfortable beginning our capital campaign," Campbell said. "We need to help people understand the why (we need a new senior center) and that's a challenge I think we are up to."

The selectmen did not feel prepared to make either of those decisions Tuesday night.

Selectmen chair Karen Quigley said it might be a few weeks before the board can take up the issue again.

According to a preliminary timeline, if all goes well, the construction of the senior center would begin in fall 2012. The move-in date would be sometime in late 2012.

Community invited to comment on superintendent candidates

During the week of Feb. 7th the School Committee conducted interviews with the three finalists in their superintendent search. As a part of the interview process the three candidates also visited all of our schools where parents and staff had the opportunity to meet with them in an informal setting.

If you were able to see the interviews on our local cable station, or visit with candidates at the schools, the School Committee would welcome your comments on these individuals.

Candidate evaluation forms are available in each of the schools, on the school website under the School Committee tab in the section labeled "Superintendent Search Updates" or via email from jeanneastino@gmail.com Please feel free to complete a form and submit it via the school business office, Attention: Dr. Helene Lieb.

The School Committee thanks you in advance, for your comments.

Cohasset Mariner recognized with awards

Places in general excellence; photographer gets top honors

Saturday was a banner night for local newspapers, websites and journalists honored at the annual New England Newspaper and Press Association (NENPA) awards banquet held at the Boston Park Plaza Hotel.

GateHouse Media New England's South unit, with newsrooms in Hingham, Marshfield, Weymouth, Plymouth and Raynham, took home 34 awards in NENPA's annual Better Newspaper Contest, a competition that draws more than 3,000 entries from newspapers throughout New England.

Staff photographer Robin Chan was named weekly photographer of the year. Chan's photos are featured weekly in the Cohasset Mariner and several of the Cohasset Mariner's sister newspapers.

The Cohasset Mariner was also recognized as a nominee for the coveted "General Excellence" award and placed second in its circulation category. The Judges praised staff reporter Nancy White's reporting on school issues, sports editor Will Wassersug's sports coverage and our localization of the story on astronaut Steve Bowen. To compete in this category, editors submit two complete issues of the paper from separate dates during the contest year.

South unit reporters, editors and photographers won awards in nearly every editorial, photography and web category in the contest culminating Saturday evening with Raynham Call reporter Susan Parkou Weinstein being named the weekly Journalist of the Year and Chan named weekly Photographer of the Year. Two of Chan's Cohasset Mariner photos contributed to his earning top photography honors.

"It was terrific to see so much of the hard work pay off for our journalists at this year's award's ceremony with the number of awards we received," said Gregory Mathis, editor-in-chief for the South unit.

"Not only were many journalists recognized, but recognized in a wide range of categories. It was truly an impressive showing and further validates what we try to do daily on our websites and weekly in our newspapers — report, write and publish stories and photos that matter to our readers in print and online," Mathis said.

Fourteen of the 34 awards were first place for categories ranging from Arts & Entertainment reporting, Coverage of a Racial or Ethnic Issue and General News Story, to Human Interest Feature, Sports Column, Transportation/ Commuter Reporting, and Web Special Section. South unit photographers won first place awards for Feature, General News and Sports photography.

"I could not have been prouder of our entire staff and management team," South unit publisher Mark Olivieri said. "Thirty-four NENPA Awards is one year is a remarkable accomplishment. To then have 14 First Place awards including Journalist of the Year and Photographer of the Year made it our most decorated evening ever."

While the NENPA awards give the newsrooms a chance to celebrate annually, Olivieri pointed out that the South unit's talented staff strives for and achieves excellence day in and day out throughout the year.

"These NENPA Awards are a reflection of the great content and photography that appears in our newspapers each week and on our Wicked Local web sites everyday."

Astronaut Steve Bowen heads back to space

Bowen, Discovery is targeted for launch next Thursday, Feb. 24, at 4:50 p.m. EST.

The STS-133 mission got postponed due to technical issues involving the shuttle's external fuel tank. That delay, plus Kopra's accident, opened the door for Bowen.

The Discovery crew will install the Express Logistics Carrier-4 (ELC-4) and a Permanent Multipurpose Module (PMM) to the International Space Station (ISS). They will also deliver Robonaut 2 and critical spare components to the station.

Astronaut Steve Lindsey will command STS-133, the final flight of space shuttle Discovery. NASA will conclude the space shuttle program this summer.

In a fun coincidence for Bowen, the pilot on STS-133 is his friend, Eric Boe. They also flew together on their first space mission, STS-126 Endeavour, in November 2008.

Due to his sudden training schedule, Bowen was unavailable to speak with the Cohasset Mariner.

But in his NASA pre-flight video interview, the former Cohasset resident described how he received the big news.

"I was actually the chief of the EVA (spacewalk) branch for the (astronaut) office," Bowen said.

"He (Kopra) had the accident on Saturday. I came in Monday, looking at the options as to how to fill the EVA role for his flight, and we came up really with three major options. The third option was actually a list of names I had."

Bowen continued: "I felt obligated to put my name on the list because I'm among those qualified, but I was fifth of six names I had on that list.

"I actually left Monday night expecting a different answer than Tuesday when I got the news, and started studying."

Bowen, selected for NASA's astronaut class of 2000, will fly with four of his classmates, including Boe.

"It's rare that you get people you've known very well for 10 years and put them on the same crew," Bowen said. "Steve Lindsey was head of the office, and so we all know him."

On Wed., Jan. 19, NASA announced that Bowen would replace Kopra on STS-133. The space agency held a special teleconference for reporters to "show you a little bit of the logic we went through of doing the replacement," said Bill Gerstenmaier, associate administrator for Space Operations at NASA Headquarters.

"This is a unique situation, replacing a crewmember six weeks before flight," he said.

NASA has switched astronauts on a flight crew only eight times before in the history of the shuttle program, said Peggy Whitson, chief of the astronaut office at NASA's Johnson Space Center in Houston. STS-133 is the closest to a shuttle launch that a swap has occurred.

COURTESY PHOTO/NASA

NASA astronaut Steve Bowen, STS-133 mission specialist, attired in a training version of his shuttle launch and entry suit, uses a communication system during a training session in the fixed-base shuttle mission simulator in the Jake Garn Simulation and Training Facility at NASA's Johnson Space Center.

In an indirect testament to Bowen's qualifications, Gerstenmaier said: "If we needed to slip the launch, we would have slipped the launch to get the right person in place."

Whitson explained why NASA decided to replace Kopra's role in two spacewalks with Bowen. Regarding Bowen, she stated: "He's a very experienced EVAer — five previous spacewalks — and very capable in terms of qualifications in the EMU (extravehicular mobility unit).

"So we felt that with very few additional runs, he could already pick up the timelined runs that Tim (Kopra) and Al (Drew) had worked out together previously and be able to pull them off with only an additional two runs in the NBL (Neutral Buoyancy Laboratory) for each of those two activities."

Whitson also said that Bowen has been training with astronaut Michael Barratt in the virtual reality laboratory. Barratt will operate the space station's robotic arm while Bowen rides it.

The Challenges Ahead — and Above

During the telecon, the Cohasset Mariner asked Whitson: What are Bowen's challenges in order to make sure that the mission gets accomplished?

"I definitely think he recognizes the challenges ahead, with only two NBL practice runs," Whitson replied. "However, since Al and Tim have really worked out a very detailed, good plan, hopefully he'll be able to step in where Tim's left off, and be able to get good direction from Tim on how to accomplish the tasks and be able to get them all completed in the timeframe allocated for the EVAs."

Whitson acknowledged: "Steve's got a very even head and calm composure, and that all makes him easy to substitute and put in here without disrupting the crew and what they've already worked out to make this a successful mission."

According to Whitson, astronauts receive skills-based training for spacewalks, as opposed to task-based training. NASA has different categorizations of EVA skills capability. Bowen was selected from the highest level, she said.

Bowen said: "I literally told the EVA team: 'Don't change a single word of the plan. I'm going to follow what he (Kopra) wrote.'"

The fact that Bowen had flown on STS-132 Atlantis — NASA's most recent shuttle mission — was "coincidential," said Whitson and also Lindsey, in the commander's NASA pre-flight video interview.

How does Lindsey appraise the unprecedented crewmember swap? "I'm pretty confident, with what we're seeing so far, that we're going to be pretty close to getting what we thought we were going to get done before.

"I'm confident that we're going to go up there and be able to execute these two EVAs quite well."

During his video interview, Bowen praised Cohasset as he reminisced about growing up in his hometown.

"It's right on the ocean, so I spent a lot of my time sailing and in the water and at the beach.

"It's a fantastic little town. I went back up there just a couple months ago and talked to the schools.

"I just enjoy the area a lot."

Sharon Chase as Princess Sharon, who brings joy and wonder to the children of her parties with her dynamic personality and elaborate costumes.

Cohasset mom owns party planning business

one of her many princess dresses.

"Anything a client wants I'll figure out a way to do it or find someone who can do it," Chase said.

She has five magical, musical upscale themed party packages: musical princess, spa-berry twist, diva glam, poodle pop star and fairy garden. Each one she has a set of props — costumes, crafts, favors — to go with it.

But, it's her knack and passion for making sure everyone at the party has a fabulous time that takes her events to the next level.

"Getting to interact directly with the children and seeing their faces and their love for everything. When I put on that princess gown everything changes," Chase said. "For me, it's all a wonderful fantasy dream. When I'm spinning in circles, holding the girls' hands, singing to them, that's when I love this job the most."

Chase does work with charities, in particular the Jimmy Fund, as well. Recently, she put together a spa party for a 12 10-year-old girls who were patients at Dana-Farber.

"Watching those girls enjoy themselves deepened my love for what I do," Chase said. That party and the cake — a giant rubber duck in a bathtub — were recently featured on an episode of TLC's "Fabulous Cakes."

Chase has plans to grow the business in the coming years. As one person, even a princess, organizing and executing several events each month is a challenge. Right now her basement is crammed with her party props dozens of princess dresses, fairy wings, fluffy tutus, and spa slippers — and she is hoping to get a central storage space and an official Princess Sharon van. In the future she envisions having a central office and adding more princesses to the business.

In addition to her custom party business, she also has a Princess Sharon Shop online to sell party favors or even complete party kits. She even has her own girly spa line called "P.S."

While children's parties are her focus she also does all sorts of event planning from weddings to showers.

"I love to bring magic to whatever I do and I feel really grateful to do what I love," Chase said.

Sharing your news

Next week is school February vacation. For us in the newspaper business, that means the school year is more than half over. When students return to classes on Feb. 28 – they will start the homestretch, which includes the prom, graduation and a host of other activities.

Here at the Cohasset Mariner, we do not want to miss a thing! Over the years we have chronicled Cohasset's story by trying to capture everything from Town Hall news, to high school and youth sports, to lifestyle feature stories.

We have been at it now in Cohasset since 1978. For many of us the past 33 years have gone by much too fast. It hits home for us when we realize the baby that we announced back in 1978 – is now likely married with kids of his or her own.

Here at the Cohasset Mariner, we cherish our role and are pleased to be the vehicle through which our readers either "get the word out" or "find out about" everything from who's on the dean's list to what is the latest news about the town or school budget.

But if you're on the delivery end of the news — in other words you want your club announcement or letter-to-the-editor in the paper — there are some simple "rules to follow."

We accept letters, news items and happenings by email, which is one of the most efficient ways to send your news. However, we receive dozens of emails everyday, so it's not a bad idea to follow your email up with a telephone call, just to make sure your message arrived safely and wasn't inadvertently deleted. Or better yet, just ask us to hit the reply button — so you'll get the message that we received your email on your computer. Attachments should be saved as word documents; photographs should be sent as jpeg attachments.

We still accept news by fax and the old-fashioned way, through the US mail, or dropped off at the Cohasset Mariner office, 73 South St., Hingham Square, above the Upper Crust.

You can also submit news and photographs on line at: www.wickedlocal.com/cohasset

News items should be as concise as possible and written in a narrative form. In other words, please write your news items in a "mini-story format" using complete sentences. Try not to send us flyers, which have to be completely reworded.

Here's the scoop on how to get your news in the Mariner:

Email: Editor, Mary Ford at: mford@cnc.com

Phone: 781-741-2933

Email: Staff reporter, Nancy White at: nwhite@cnc.com

Phone: 781-741-2935

You can stop by our office in person: at the Cohasset Mariner office (in the Hingham Journal Building), 73 South St., Hingham Square, above the Upper Crust. (We are right around the corner from Talbots).

Mail: The Cohasset Mariner, 73 South St., Hingham, MA 02043

Sports news email: to Will Wassersug at: wwassers@cnc.com

Phone: 781-837-4577

Try to have your news to the Mariner by noon Wednesday for that week's issue, however, earlier is always better. If letters email we can stretch that deadline a few hours.

We welcome news tips and story ideas anytime.

New wish list for Food Pantry

The Cohasset Food Pantry is thankful for the continued support from the community. Many bakers made special treats for the pantry clients to make their Valentine's Day a little more special.

"A special thank you to all the children who made beautiful and heartwarming Valentine cards. Everyone was deeply touched by the generosity of the Cohasset and Scituate community," said food pantry co-director Jane Corry.

The pantry has come a long way in filling their shelves over the past few months – thanks to the generosity of the community. Yet, there is a constant need, especially for certain items, see list below.

Donations can be dropped off at the rear entrance of St. Anthony's Rectory on South Main St. from 8:30 to 9:30a.m. on Tuesdays, at Stop & Shop, or at local churches on Sundays. To give a monetary donation, the food pantry mailing address is Cohasset Food Pantry, P.O. Box 297, Cohasset, MA 02025.

To contact the food pantry call 781-383-0219, ext. 25. Someone will return your call.

The Cohasset Food Pantry does not accept expired or already opened food.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

CEF Donor Match Campaign a huge success

TO THE EDITOR:

On behalf of the Cohasset Education Foundation, I would like to thank everyone in the community that helped to make this year's annual appeal campaign such an unparalleled success.

As of Jan. 30, donations to the CEF totaled nearly $60,000, with an additional $10,000 pledged! Special thanks go out to members of the donor pool, as well as all of those who participated in this year's campaign – many of whom were first time donors. Your donations will go a long way in providing the programs, materials and equipment that will enhance the educational experience for all students in the Cohasset Public Schools.

Your contributions are already hard at work. In December the CEF awarded a grant request for a Mobile Notebook Computer Lab at the Deer Hill School, which provides 32 Netbooks with a wireless cart that will be available to every classroom in grades three through five. Last month the CEF awarded a grant for classroom computers at the Osgood School that will provide 32 computers, monitors and software for all students in grades kindergarten through two. These grant awards, and a sizable boost to the endowment, would not be possible without your support.

It is the mission of the Cohasset Education Foundation to provide funding for programs, materials and equipment that enhance, enrich and maintain excellence in our schools in ways not supported by the regular budget. Thank you for your contribution in support of our kids, our town and our future.

Missing water is not 'lost'

COMMENTARY

PETER DECAPRIO

The auditors make no accommodation for our Tri-Party agreement with Linden Ponds and Aquarion in their calculations.

We have received a number of calls from customers with questions regarding the "lost water" claims made in the recently released Water/Sewer audit report. To suggest, as our auditors do, that lost water is a significant reason for the high cost of Cohasset water is simply incorrect.

The auditors make no accommodation for our Tri-Party agreement with Linden Ponds and Aquarion in their calculations. Linden Ponds and Aquarion are not billed as retail customers, but rather pay a flat rate that does not flow through our metered billing system. In FY 2009 we delivered 35 million gallons of water to them; in FY 2010 approximately 47 million gallons. For the last two full fiscal years, therefore, Linden Ponds/Aquarion represented 15 and 22 percent of total water produced. This has to be accounted for to get an accurate lost water figure. Just eliminating Linden Ponds from the calculations reduces the auditor's lost water percentage to 28 percent.

Furthermore, because of its unplanned need last year, we pumped 16.0 million more gallons to Aquarion than is typical. That additional volume also needs to be accounted for. Moreover, no accommodation appears to have been made for other unbilled water production like the flows for the hydrant underneath Cunningham Bridge (necessary to keep the hydrant lines from freezing in the winter), the duck pond on the Common (which used to flow continuously), bi-annual flushing of the system, etc. The duck pond used almost 1.5 million gallons per month, as an example.

Lastly with respect to unbilled water, Melanson Heath ignores construction activities during the periods they reference. Many customers were supplied water via temporary bypasses during construction, when a meter is bypassed and only the quarterly fee billed. Temporary bypass was used during the periods in question on Deep Run, Nichols Road, Orchard Cove, Smalzel Way, Caravel Cove, White Head Road, Little Harbor Road, Keene Way, Jerusalem Road, and North Main Street. In general, a home would be on temporary bypass for approximately three months. We estimate that 150 homes were on bypass as a result of the Little Harbor project during this period. That was not accounted for.

Eighty five percent of the water department's budget is fixed between debt service and contract operations. If only 15 percent of costs are variable with water production, water loss can never be that much of a factor in customer bills. At a hypothetical 50 percent loss rate (it's not), the maximum that a customer's bill could be apportioned to lost water would be 7.5 percent. The reality, of course, is far, far less.

Lost water is not the reason for our high water bills — debt service is. That debt was accumulated as a result of the Memorial Day Water Crisis in 1994, which many residents may still remember. The town made it clear to the water commissioners then that the system needed to be fixed. The mandate from the Board of Selectmen in 1994 was "Develop a plan, fix the system, ask for funding, and execute." In 1999, water commissioners told Town Meeting that the rebuilding plan needed would likely cost

Knowledge is key with medications

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

If you take a medication and you feel strange, report it to your pharmacist or health care professional.

Medications – Almost everybody takes pills. It's a national pastime. Recently, many people have been asking the same question. It's generally a version of: "Is this the best I can do?" Whether you have a medical plan, get medications from your doctor, or pay for them yourself, there's always a question. In medical diagnostics, not only is the volume of information on a subject constantly increasing, but the measurements and definitions of what is being measured are all changing as well.

Side effects – Examine the side effects and report them if you sense you're having any. In order for a medication to be declared as having side effects, the same symptoms must occur to a number of patients. So, if you take a medication and you feel strange, report it to your pharmacist, doctor or health care professional.

Is it the right medication? Discuss this issue with your doctor. The medications you're taking may no longer be the most appropriate for your present symptoms. If you take a medication and you feel strange, report it to your pharmacist or health-care professional. That person should be able to tell you how many other reports like yours have been received. Remember, drug interactions and side effects are different, so you should always tell your health care provider about all your other medications as well as any side effects you've discovered.

Are you taking it properly? The instruction manual accompanying a drug is usually comparable to that issued with your VCR. Clearly, though, it's not OK to ignore the instructions or forget about some of the restrictions. It's necessary to read and obey the fine print, even if reading the label requires a magnifying glass. Most drugs give instructions about what to do if you miss a medication. Serious consequences sometimes accompany missed medication. Likewise overdosing is a mistake. "If some is good, more is better" is generally not a sensible option.

Is it doing the job? Is the medication creating an effect it was intended to have? Generally, a doctor will know when to expect an improvement of a condition as a result of medication. Ask him when you should check back to report on the medication's success of failure.

Costs – Medical plans vary as to how they cover medications. Nevertheless, they all have provisions that can work in your favor. Prescriptions for most medications have time limits. At renewal time, verify the cost. Sometimes the cost from a pharmacy is less than the co-pay and there is no reason to pay the larger amount. In other words, you are not locked into the price the insurance company pays for medications if you can find it at a lower cost elsewhere.

Generics vs. brand name – Use generics; they're cheaper, and it's the same stuff. A generic drug is identical, or bioequivalent to a brand name drug in dosage form, safety, strength, route of administration, quality, performance characteristics and intended use. Although generic drugs are chemically identical to their branded counterparts, they are typically sold at substantial discounts from the branded price. According to the Congressional Budget Office, generic drugs save consumers an estimated $8 to $10 billion a year at retail pharmacies. Even more billions are saved when hospitals use generics.

Multiple medications – For those taking many medications, to do so at the right time and in the right amount is sometimes challenging. There are an almost infinite variety of pill containers for organizing medications, vitamins, etc., even a talking pill case.

Facts related to medication have undergone revision and will continue to change. So, identification of the ailment you have is based on the diagnostician's skill and knowledge. In such an environment, it is well to be sure about the meds you're taking. Be skeptical.

Steve Bobo is a long-time member of the Cohasset Board of Health.

And the awards go to…

FOR THE RECORD

GREGORY MATHIS

February is a great month for love and for those who love awards and award ceremonies.

The music industry had its biggest night of the year Sunday with the 53rd annual Grammy awards, celebrating the best songs and best artists of the year from all genres of music.

The 83rd annual Academy Awards will be held later this month on Sunday, Feb. 27 and we'll find out what film walks away with this year's Oscar, who will be honored as top director, and who will be recognized as best male and female actor and supporting actor.

For those of us in the newspaper business, February is also the time of year we celebrate the best journalism in New England. Our award event, which is sponsored and hosted by the New England Newspaper and Press Association (NENPA), isn't quite as elaborate as the Grammys or Oscars with major stage productions and live musical performances throughout the night. Our nominees don't walk the red carpet in couture gowns and jewels to start the evening and Joan Rivers isn't there to provide commentary on what designer the journalists and their guests are wearing. And rest assured nobody arrived at the Park Plaza in Boston this past Saturday in an alien-like egg carried by attendants dressed in gold.

It may be less glitzy and glamorous but you can bet there is similar excitement when you hear your name read as the winner of a category. And fortunately for our group of journalists, there were a lot of names read in a lot of categories Saturday night.

So the lead doesn't get buried, I'll start at the end of the night when the biggest awards are announced. And the biggest awards for weekly journalists went to two talented people we have the pleasure to work with in our newsrooms. Susan Parkou Weinstein was named weekly Journalist of the Year and Robin Chan won weekly Photographer of the Year.

When it was all said and done, those prestigious awards capped off a terrific night that included 34 awards honoring many talented journalists who represent a number of our newspapers and websites.

There were no acceptance speeches delivered at the NENPA awards ceremony, but if allowed to say something on behalf of our awards and award winners, it would go something like this:

"We are extremely honored to be recognized by our peers in the newspaper industry with these awards. We don't report, write, or manage websites to win awards, but we're certainly grateful for the recognition of the hard work done day in and day out, week in and week out, and throughout the year by our terrific staff. Our main goal is to serve our readers and it's exciting to see our commitment to community journalism rewarded."

So the plaques will soon be hung on the office walls next to those from previous years and we put NENPA behind us for another year and continue our pursuit of excellence.

Cohasset: Delay vote on Turkey Hill turbine

COMMENTARY

WILLIAM M. DRISCOLL

With this industrial development, the Trustees will permanently destroy conservation land that they have been entrusted to protect, land that the Trustees themselves describe as a "special place."

What do you get when you put conservationists from Beverly in a room with the Cohasset Planning Board? Hint: it will be located on the Hingham town line, stand taller than a 747 jet airplane, be as loud as the deck of an aircraft carrier and will even have its own runway — you guessed it, an industrial wind turbine in the Whitney Thayer Woods.

On Jan. 7th, Declan Boland of the Community Advisory Committee wrote to this paper and updated the community on the progress that it has made with the FAA to reduce the number of flights flying over our area. Mr. Boland described a 10-year effort that required $100,000 of Hingham town appropriation, further support from Cohasset and Hull and another $8,000,000 spent by interested parties to complete what he described as phase one of a four part study on noise reduction. The result of this collaboration was an agreement to increase the altitude of flight paths and to disburse them more equitably over south shore towns. As a resident of the Turkey Hill area, I would like to thank Mr. Boland, his colleagues and the towns of Hingham, Cohasset and Hull for their efforts.

On Feb. 23rd, the Cohasset Planning Board will meet to vote on the industrial wind turbine proposed for the Whitney Thayer Woods, near the top of Turkey Hill. The plan has been put forward by the Trustees of Reservations, which is headquartered in the north shore town of Beverly. The turbine has the dimensions and characteristics of a jumbo jet. Its length of 410 feet and wingspan of 250 feet will exceed that of a 747 while the noise emitted from its hub of 170 decibels will exceed that found on an aircraft carrier. The combined weight of the turbine is 540 thousand pounds and will be set in 2 million pounds of concrete and steel rebar. The scope of this industrial development is unlike anything previously conceived in this area and not surprisingly the infrastructure to make it happen does not exist. To fix this problem the Trustees will construct a new 500-foot long "runway" that would extend Hingham's Turkey Hill Lane to the development site. This would require another 500 thousand pounds of crushed stone and asphalt.

For 10 years our local governments, including Hingham and Cohasset, worked hand-in-hand to fight the impacts of airline flight traffic on our local community while in a few short months the Cohasset Planning Board's decision may allow the Trustees from Beverly to lay a new "runway" at the top of Turkey Hill Lane, truck 3 million pounds of equipment up Hingham's side streets and plunk the equivalent of a 747 on its tail near the top of Turkey Hill. With this industrial development, the Trustees will permanently destroy conservation land that they have been entrusted to protect, land that the Trustees themselves describe as a "special place." None of this makes any sense to me. The Cohasset Planning Board should delay its vote and reach out to Hingham town government agencies. For a project of this scope, Cohasset and Hingham should work closely to understand the long-term impacts to the larger community.

William M. Driscoll lives at 4 Pheasant Run in Hingham.

DTC hosts Movie Night tonight!

The movie "Temple Grandin" will be February's movie night presented by the Cohasset Democratic Town Committee at 7 p.m., on Friday, Feb. 18, in the Meeting Room of Paul Pratt Memorial Library.

Emmy award winner Claire Danes stars as Temple Grandin, a brilliant young woman diagnosed with autism as a child in the early fifties. At that time the thinking of most psychiatrists was that autism was caused not by nature, but by nurture and blamed cold, unemotional "refrigerator" mothers for their child's affliction. Determined to help her daughter, whose psychiatrist first diagnosed Temple with infantile schizophrenia, Temple's mother, Eustacia said," I'm supposed to have done this; well then, I can undo it."

With her mother's support and guidance and that of some dedicated teachers, Ms. Grandin went on to success in life and became known worldwide for her knowledge of animal behavior. She has been an invaluable in the efforts to change how people with autism spectrum disorder are regarded and supported by their families, educators and society as a whole.

Register to vote for Special Town Meeting

The last day to register to vote for the Special Town Meeting on Monday, March 14, is Friday, March 4. Registration will take place at the Town Clerk's office from 8:30 a.m. to 8 p.m.

Any US citizen who is a Massachusetts resident and who will be 18 years old on or before a town meeting or Election Day may register to vote. There is no waiting period. If a person moves, they may register to vote as soon as they move into the new home. Registration is closed for a brief period before each town meeting and election to allow election officials time to prepare the voting lists. If people register during a closed period, they will be eligible to vote only in later town meetings or elections.

Osgood and Deer Hill in midst of PSO Readathon

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

It's a marathon, not a sprint.

This idiom is an apt one for the perennially popular Readathon happening right now at the Osgood and Deer Hill schools.

At the Readathon, which doubles as a fundraiser for the PSO, it is not about the pace of the reader, but the energy and time a reader puts in. Last week, both schools kicked off the annual program with an opening ceremony.

"This program levels the playing field. A student can be reading an advanced novel for their grade level or Sports Illustrated for Kids; it doesn't matter as long as they are reading. There is enough participation to light up the enthusiasm for reading in both schools," said Kate Krumsiek, co-coordinator of the readathon for the PSO.

While the program's main goal is to encourage students to incorporate reading into their daily life, the Readathon also is a big fundraiser for the PSO, or Parent Schools Organization. The PSO is a parent volunteer driven group devoted to providing support to Cohasset schools through fundraising, organizing and donating time. The money raised goes back into the classroom, funding special events, innovative teaching tools and learning programs.

The students find sponsors to support their reading endeavors. In previous years, the Readathon has raised about $13,000 for the PSO.

The Readathon runs three weeks and one of those weeks is February vacation week. Each day the students log their reading minutes and report them to the classroom teacher.

"We always hope the vacation week gives kids extra time to read," Krumsiek said.

An opening ceremony gets kids excited to start logging in their reading minutes. For the next three weeks — especially at Deer Hill — the competition can get intense.

The bulletin board with a master list of the calculated reading totals for each class is updated four times over the course of the three-week program.

"The number is inspiring – the numbers get high! And you know the kids are giving up other things in order to read," Krumsiek said.

At Osgood, the reading totals are calculated by grade level, while at Deer Hill they are recorded by classroom. A winning classroom is named at the end of the three weeks and each classroom has a top reader who is recognized.

A big part of the program's success can be tied back to the teachers who embrace the program in their classrooms.

"I do love the readathon!" said Deer Hill fifth grade teacher Karin Johnston. "I love the smell of a new books, sometimes the students thing I'm a little crazy when I say that, but I have to say that when I present a new book to the class, they usually jump at it."

Last year, in order to motivate her class to log the most reading minutes in the whole school, she promised she would dress up as Snow White if they accomplished the goal.

"Sure enough, on the last day of the readathon I busted out my Snow White costume, wig and all! It was great fun and I can't believe how much it motivated them!" Johnston said.

She assigns her students 30 minutes of reading for homework every night throughout the year, which makes it easy for all her students to get on board with the readathon.

"Some students really get into it and they don't even realize that it is about reading, which is not something every student 'loves' but they all are readers for those three weeks. It's also a great team building exercise not only within the classrooms, but also within the school," Johnston said.

Fifth grade teacher Kathy Jordan said her class enjoys a friendly competition with Mike Lewis's fourth-grade class each year. But, it's how the readathon nurtures a student and school love for reading is what Jordan most enjoys.

"My favorite part of the Readathon is just sitting and reading silently with my class. Looking around my classroom and seeing all students engaged and interested in reading a variety of genres is just a wonderful feeling. There is a contented silence in the room as we all sit and enjoy our favorite books," Jordan said.

The Readathon program has several special events, at Deer Hill they do "Read Your Heart Out" day where extended periods of time are devoted to silent reading. Another day brings readers from all different segments of the community are invited to come read aloud in classrooms at both schools.

"My favorite part about the readathon is when guest readers visit our classes. It's so important for our children to know they are surrounded by readers," said Leslie Diminnie, library teacher at Osgood.

At both Osgood and Deer Hill there is a culture of readers and writers.

"The readathon provides an opportunity to call attention to the fact that we are community or readers and writers and to celebrate our part in the community. We encourage and celebrate all stages of reading development whether a child is at an emergent stage or is able to read a difficult chapter book," said Lynne Kenny, Osgood reading specialist.

At Osgood the students are taught the "silent signal" of both hands opened like a book.

"They can give (the signal) to teachers or (Principal Janet Sheehan) to show that they have been reading at home," Kenny said. "Many of our students continue to give me the signal throughout the year."

The readathon runs through Friday, March 4, with a closing ceremony the following week on March 11.

Second grader Connie Chapman reacts to the video that was being played for the Osgood School students to kick off the readathon.

Selectmen race shapes up

Mary Snow pulls papers to run

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The drought is over.

For the first time in four election seasons it looks like there will be a contested race for the Board of Selectmen.

This week, Mary Snow of 317 North Main St. pulled papers to run for a selectmen seat.

"I have decided to run for Selectman because I don't like the way things are being managed and rather than just sit back and complain, I would like to be part of a change," said Snow. "I'm a very common sense type of person. If something isn't right for all then change it."

Snow will be up against the two incumbent candidates, current selectmen chair Karen Quigley and long-time board member Fred Koed. Both previously took out nomination papers.

Residents are not considered candidates until they return nomination papers with signatures and the signatures are certified. Quigley has returned her nomination papers and had them certified, so she is officially running.

Snow has lived in Cohasset for "most" of her life – 53 years to be exact, except for a six-month time she spent in nearby North Scituate. She is also a long-time town employee. She has worked in the Highway Department, and subsequently Public Works, for 22 years.

"I'm sure that being a town employee while being an elected official will be a challenge, but not a problem. I will obviously have to recuse myself from matters concerning Public Works as well as any union discussions," Snow said. "I feel that my experience as a town employee will bring a different mindset to the board."

Snow does have concerns about the town and would like to be a proponent for change, including making changes to the water and sewer departments and the way their budgets are governed. She also is interested in nurturing local business.

"The biggest challenge will be to maintain town services that everyone can afford. There are areas that monies can be saved without drastic changes to the services residents receive now," Snow said.

Town Clerk Marion Douglas said campaign finance law prohibits town employees from raising money as individuals. A candidate can use their own money, or a campaign committee can be formed to fundraise on the candidate's behalf.

The town has another town employee seeking an elected position this year as well. Current assistant town clerk Carol St. Pierre pulled papers for the Town Clerk position.

Also this week, Susan Sardina of 271 South Main St. pulled nomination papers to retain her seat on the Housing Authority. Carolyn Coffey returned her nomination papers for Library Trustees.

about $3 million per year for the next 10 years, and that is precisely what has happened. Capital projects were conducted for a period of almost 10 years before any rate increases were instituted. That's why rates are high today.

It's fun for some to demagogue circumstances at the Water Department for political gain. We would merely ask residents that have questions to ask us directly. It is remarkable how often you will find that the reality of the water department's operations differs from the popular mythology.

LETTERS

TO THE EDITOR:

As I participated in both evenings of interviews, as a parent and former School Committee member, I was looking for some key words to help me better understand the candidate's breadth of experience and knowledge which they would bring to Cohasset to keep us moving forward. I was looking to see if any candidate possessed knowledge of our district's present Vision and Mission; if they had a clear understanding of education in the 21st century; if they have experience and knowledge to think globally; if they understood what relevance and rigor is in the classroom of today; even if they understood our reliance on fees and grants rather than taxes. Additionally, it would have been nice to know their experience around the buzz words we have had so much debate over: de-leveling, Block Scheduling, Program Supervisors, 21st Century thinking, Strategic planning, etc.

I was left with many unanswered questions and many concerns about the future of our district under the leadership of any one of the three candidates. This is not to say that these candidates could not be the right fit for another district, but are they the right candidate for Cohasset — knowing where we are today? I ask this because we have come so far in the areas of academic excellence, finance and policy; for example: we have staff that are highly qualified, with their certifications and licensures in order; we have a curriculum renewal plan in place and working; we are working to make sure ALL high school students are challenging themselves by allowing greater access to higher levels of curriculum; in turn, we have more students taking AP classes; we have several areas were we collaboratively purchase or share resources (utilities, transportation, sports, food service, etc); we have an innovative integrated preschool as well as a program for students with more severe needs; we have a fee-based full day kindergarten program; etc. The right leader for the future of our schools needs to understand were we came from, where we are and, together with the school committee and community, where we want to be and then take us to that next level. A Superintendent must be able to lead the schools with academic excellence but also possess business savvy that includes being able to effectively communicate and motivate.

Many districts go back out, at another time, to search again for the candidate with the "right fit." In the mean time, you can appoint an interim Superintendent; this will give you time as a committee to perhaps revisit, renew or develop a Strategic Plan with the stakeholders — allowing the committee and potential candidates to know the desired direction of our public schools and then the candidates articulate how they would lead us in that direction.

Today, we are lucky to have a creative, forward thinking Administrative team in place; some of whom would even be an excellent fit as an interim superintendent. This would allow you some flexibility and assurance that our schools will "continue the commitment to excellence" while you take the time to find the next right leader.

Performance, not structural issues

COMMENTARY

JOHN BECK

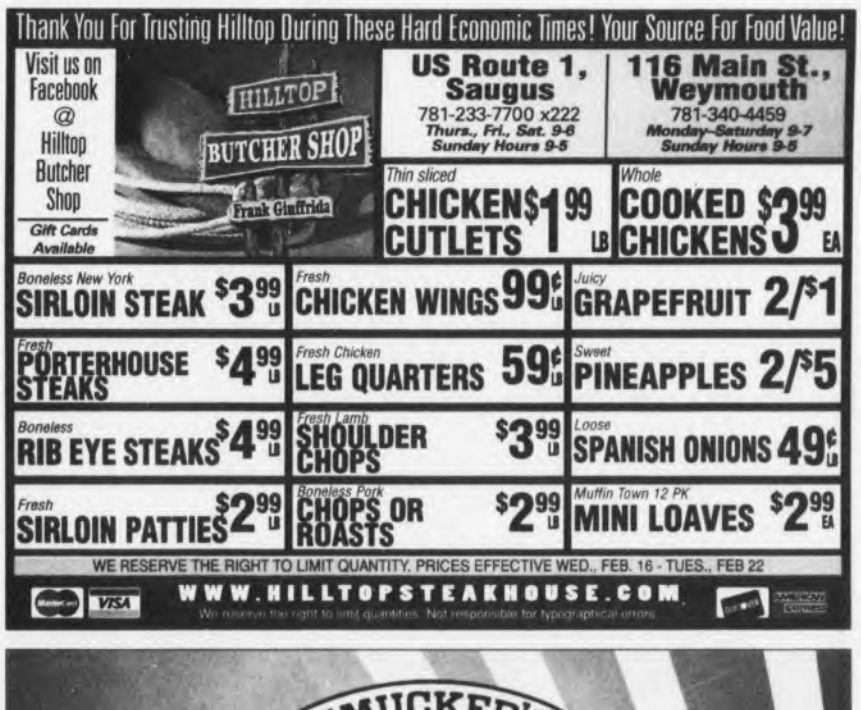
We kept separate spreadsheets, independent of the finance office, and managed to our bottom-line. The sewer project was completed safely, on time and significantly below budget.

After reading the Draft Audit Report of the Water and Sewer "departments" (for lack of a better description), some observations and comments are appropriate. First, I believe the audit was thorough and uncovered a number of facts and conditions, which should be addressed. However, the governance recommendations are illogically concluded and do not address the findings of the audit. The audit found numerous instances of performance failures, both individual and institutional, and then recommended structural changes to address these performance issues. Rather than tackle performance issues head on, the audit recommendation took the easy way out: if you have performance issues, re-organize and the problems will go away. That is a fatally flawed answer, which will inevitably lead to much greater expense (I estimate additional costs could be as high as $500,000 annually) to the Town and less responsive management of the enterprises than we now have. It will put management responsibility in the hands of bureaucrats instead of elected officials.

What were the performance issues?

First, the former Director of Finance and his office failed to timely perform their duties, and in some instances apparently violated state requirements. If the reason for inadequate performance was overload (I do not believe that to be true) then there should have been additional, temporary help provided until the project related workload diminished. The Sewer Commission compensated for this poor performance by essentially keeping our own books so that we could track our expenses and effectively manage the enterprise. We kept separate spreadsheets, independent of the finance office, and managed to our bottom-line. The sewer project was completed safely, on time and significantly below budget. The Sewer Commission also corrected a flawed escalation clause in the operating contract by replacing the operations contractor after negotiations to change the escalation process were rejected by the previous contractor. Our current five-year budget projects no need for a rate increase for at least the next five years. Since our last rate increase was in 2008 we should realize an eight-year period without the need for an increase in the flow-based fees to sewer users in Cohasset. (The audit did show that we must do more than just manage to the bottom line from a financial accounting perspective. We have made the minor adjustments needed to accommodate that finding.) The Water Commission did not compensate for the lack of timely accounting, nor did they strategically plan for servicing their debt with adequate revenue. The stark differences experienced by the two enterprise funds proves that the root cause of the difficulties was due to performance, not structure.

Second, the numerous levels of oversight failed to detect the long-fermenting issues in the Water Department. This failure of adequate oversight includes the Director of Finance, the Town Manager, the Advisory Committee, the Capital Budget Committee, the Board of Selectmen and Town Meeting.



What should be done to correct these performance issues?

First, we already have a new Director of Finance and will have a new Town Manager. It is essential that the job descriptions for the Director of Finance (and those in his department) and the Town Manager be updated and everyone is held accountable for their performance. This accountability should include regular feedback from those other town departments who rely on the Town finance and accounting functions to effectively manage their departments. The system of requisitions and purchase orders recommended by the audit should be implemented and the accounting software should be updated.

The oversight function should be revitalized by requiring the water and sewer enterprises to maintain a rolling five-year budget, which is reviewed annually by the Town Manager, Advisory Committee, Capital Budget Committee and Board of Selectmen. An updated, quarterly finance report for each enterprise should be timely provided to the aforementioned oversight entities and any questions arising should be responded to immediately.

The problems were not structural; they were due to poor performance. The Sewer Commission compensated for poor performance, the Water Commission didn't. Don't succumb to the pussyfooting panacea of reorganizing to fix people issues. Elect and/or hire new people if the old ones cannot or will not do their jobs. Don't adopt more bureaucracy to fix performance issues within the bureaucracy.

Making music with the sun

Hingham man creates Sky Boxes

By Korri Leigh Crowley
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The sun. We haven't seen much of it these past few months, but with Craig Colorusso's help we can hear it. Colorusso's innovative Sun Boxes harness the power of the sun to produce a beautiful and dynamic song.

A Hingham resident by way of Connecticut and New York City, and a musician since his teens, Colorusso spent much of his twenties producing music and touring with the band China Pig. While he loved performing he eventually became frustrated with the limitations of playing live shows. "I became fed up with the wall between audience and the performance," said Colorusso. Feeling disappointed with what he was doing he thought often of ways to expand and alter the live music experience.

Described as "a solar powered sound installation," the Sun Boxes were born when Colorusso used the carpentry skills he had gained from years in construction to build small wooden boxes fitted with speakers and solar panels. PC (printed circuit) boards inside the boxes are loaded with a single guitar note played and recorded by Colorusso. Heard together, the notes from the 20 boxes form a B flat chord. Colorusso said that "I wanted it sound like daytime, and B flat sounded uplifting but tweaked enough so that when you listen you can go down the path of introspection and focus."

Each box produces a tone of a different length so the resulting sound is dynamic, haunting, and always evolving.

Each box produces a tone of a different length so the resulting sound is dynamic, haunting, and always evolving. This evolution of sound is central to the Sun Box experience, Colorusso says, "It's is almost impossible to recreate the sounds, they're different every time." Colorusso encourages participants to become involved with the installation and dictate their own experience. In his efforts to avoid the separation between audience and performer that he encountered during his touring days, Colorusso always arranges the Sun Boxes so that the listener can be surrounded by and immersed in the music.

The concept of time is also a part of the Sun Box experience. "I think about time a lot. As I get older I think about the reality of my mortality. Time is one of those things that you can't fudge," explained Colorusso. When the Sun Boxes are set out and the sun goes down, the music stops. The cessation of the music is a documentation of that one moment between day and night, a concrete threshold experienced in a different way with the Sun Boxes.

Colorusso and his wife have lived in Hingham for the past five years and the ocean has become a definite inspiration. "I never really understood what the big deal [about the ocean] was, when you live in New York City you're not part of the ocean even though you're surrounded by it. We live a mile and a half from Nantasket Beach and walk there frequently. The power of the ocean is beautiful. The sound of the waves is better than most music."

The beach has provided Colorusso with a perfect location for his Sun Boxes with the sounds of the waves, wind, and birds mixing with the music to further enhance the experience. He recently set up the Sun Boxes on Sandy Beach in Cohasset.

After having showings in Nevada and Turner's Falls, Mass. in 2010, The Sun Boxes travel next to the Indianapolis Museum of Art for a three day show starting March 18th. Otherwise, Colorusso hopes to expand on his idea of solar-powered music and make the concept more accessible. He has thoughts of smaller sun boxes that can be brought into our homes and produced on a larger scale. "I'm trying to make art for everybody," he said.

Kevin Belli, a documentary filmmaker based in Somerville, is working with Colorusso to produce a short documentary about the Sun Boxes that will hopefully be finished in the fall. Colorusso envisions the film being played in conjunction with the sounds of the Sun Boxes to create yet another dimension to the piece.

After this long winter when we all wait anxiously for the first portends of warm weather – blue jays, crocuses, cars with their windows down – we can add another to the list: the airy sounds of Craig Colorusso's Sun Boxes powered by the spring sun.

BOYS BASKETBALL

As big as it gets

By William Wassersug
WWASSERS@CNC.COM

For the Cohasset boys basketball team, this Friday night's home game against Mashpee is about as big, or bigger than any regular season home game in years.

It's not just big, but made for TV big.

The Skippers, who recently celebrated a milestone when Robert Jones scored his 1,000th career point on Friday night in a win against Norwell, will host Mashpee for a share of the South Shore League title, and Fox 25 will be on hand as the game is their Game of the Week.

The station was at practice yesterday to interview coaches and captains, and will be at the game.

Radio station WATD will be doing cutaways during the game as well.

Cohasset (15-2, 13-2 SSL) has earned the privilege.

Despite a 79-78 last-second setback in a barnburner at Abington on Tuesday, Cohasset is ready and itching to play, and hopefully even their series against Mashpee this season.

Mashpee (18-1, 13-1 SSL) beat Cohasset at Mashpee 66-53 in January.

Cohasset coach Bo Ruggiero said Cohasset will be ready for the rematch.

"It all comes down to our team executing what they do well," he said. "We hope to stop them from setting the tone. Hey beat us the first time we played. We've watched film. We feel prepared."

Ruggiero said he's expecting a big turnout.

"Seating will be at a premium," he said. "Hopefully we'll get a good crowd. Mashpee is coming up with fan buses. We're a game behind. A win for us gives them two losses with one game left, a makeup against Norwell. The ball is in our hands. If we win we're champions. It will be a fun atmosphere. Boys basketball is relevant again. We're taking on our own mini-tradition that start-

The next step

The Cohasset girls basketball team had a tough loss on Tuesday against Abington, but it wasn't enough to put a damper on what has been another outstanding season.

With one game left on the regular season schedule, a Feb. 23 date with Harwich in a makeup game, checks in at 17-3, and have a big 49-37 win over Norwell still fresh in their minds.

"Norwell (17-2 with one loss an exclusion game to New Bedford)) is one of the best teams in the state," Cohasset coach John LeVangie said of the Div. 2 squad that has become a powerhouse this season. "To knock them off is great. To beat them at their place was big."

To get where they are, Cohasset has relied on their senior leadership of Rachel Fredey, Carli Haggerty and Lindsey Davis, but when the next level comes in a few weeks, Cohasset will need everyone.

Against Norwell, the entire team was playing their best.

"The whole team played well," LeVangie said. "To win in the tournament we'll need that. The whole team is capable of it. We need to focus and match the intensity of other teams."

Between Norwell and Abington, Cohasset rolled by Nantucket 72-20 on Sunday.

WRESTLING

Weekend of champions

By Matt Brooks
SPECIAL TO THE COHASSET MARINER

"Six times in a day," says Cohasset wrestling Coach Torin Sweeney as he describes the wrestling at the MIAA Division III South Sectional individual tournament that was held this past weekend at Foxboro High School.

"If they didn't get a bye in their first round, they had to wrestle five or six times a day," he affirms.

The one-day tournament on Saturday saw thirteen teams come together in order to pit their best wrestlers against one another to see who qualifies for the upcoming State tournament.

"We came out and we showed our conditioning and our technique," Sweeney continued. "After last week in the dual meet tournament, us coming in fourth, I thought we were a little better than that, so it was good to show in the individual tournament that with the, shall we say, 'the old fashion' scoring we were able to come back and get second in that tournament. I was very happy, very pleased with that, I thought that was great."

And it was great. Cohasset had nine wrestlers place in the tournament - three taking the title of Champion. Harry Helbock (Fr) placed sixth in his weight class, and both Kimani Hale-Sadm (Jr) and Graham Bell (Soph) claimed fifth place. Nicky Tangherlini (Soph) escaped with fourth place, and Derek Froio (Jr) and Graden Foley (Jr) emerged as finalists. Alex Kinnealey (Sr), Thomas Flibotte (Sr), and Gus Helbock (Jr) all ended the day by triumphing and placing first in their respective weight classes.

"Everybody stayed till the end," Sweeney describes, "and the parents were there all the way up until the finals for A.K. winning it."

"It was a job well done!" he exclaims adamantly, beaming.

"For a lot of hard work -about two and a half months of work -

BOYS HOCKEY

Lots of promise

After a disappointing loss to South Shore League leaders Abington/East Bridgewater last Thursday, the Cohasset boys hockey team prepared for Senior Night on Saturday facing off against South Shore Voc-Tech.

"We were still reeling from the loss Thursday night," said Cohasset coach Bob Walsh. "Clearly only one team showed up to play that night and they made us pay dearly. But tonight it was all about my seniors. We welcomed Whit, (Andrew Whitney), back after a serious injury he had from the third game into the season. Besides Whit, I have seven other seniors this year, Eric Bartucca who is now out for the rest of the season with a wrist fracture, Anders Goetz, Brian Scott, TJ Bicknell, Travers Craven, Sam Leahy and, of course, Jack Nelson."

Saturday was a different story, though as the Skippers struck three times in the first period.

The first was right off the opening faceoff when senior captain, Anders Goetz picked up his 124th career high school point, just 13 seconds into the game.

"Anders is a great player and highly competitive," remarked Walsh. "Between him, Eves and JC, (junior assistant captain Alex Evans and junior forward John Collins), the tone of a game is often set by how they come out to play."

The second goal was scored by freshman phenom Tommy O'Brien assisted by freshman Terence Doonan and senior Travers Craven while the third goal of the period was scored by Evans, assisted by Goetz and Collins ending the period 3-0.

In the second period, the game heated up with the Vikings Mitchell Boothman scoring his first of three at 5:18 of the period. Cohasset answered at 7:11 of the period when senior captain defenseman, Brian Scott took the puck end to end scoring unassisted. SSVT answered quickly at 8:37 when Boothman scored his

An outstanding beginning

For at least one team, the 2010-2011 winter sports season was a groundbreaking endeavor.

That would be the Cohasset/Hanover girls hockey team, that played its first season over the winter.

"We began and ended the season with 21 girls (7 from Hanover and 14 from Cohasset)," coach Deb Beal said. "The commitment and the dedication from the girls has been very impressive and I have a pretty good idea that the girls really enjoyed the experience. Being a part of this groundbreaking experience was exciting."

Beal said time was spent learning about players combined from two towns, who on occasion are rivals.

Cohasset Travel Basketball roundup

Girls Grade 5 wins third straight

The Cohasset girls fifth grade travel basketball team rolled to its third straight win and fourth in its last five outings with a dominating 27-8 victory over Norwell Saturday at the Norwell Middle School gym.

Cohasset held Norwell to its lowest point total of the season, while also scoring the second highest number of points that Norwell has allowed.

Elle Hansen and Zoe Doherty led the Blue and White in the scoring department with nine and six points respectively, but once again the Fledgling Fifths received a total team effort from every girl who stepped on the floor.

Aidan Chamberlain and Leanne Hayden added four points each, while Kate McGowan and Mary Catherine Crumley also tingled the twine for a bucket apiece.

However, a key to the Cohasset triumph was a staunch team defensive and rebounding effort, especially in the second half when the Blue and White limited Norwell to just two points and pulled away for the win. Kate Quigley, Mary Tarpey, and Kendall McConnaughey established a strong perimeter defense on top, while Bridget Desjourdy and Kate Fitzpatrick helped to control the boards.

Sixth grade girls win two straight

The sixth grade girls basketball team continues to enjoy a very productive season. The Super Sixers have won two straight after having dropped a pair of close, one-point games the previous two weeks to Braintree and Hanover.

Last Sunday the Blue and White girls overcame a slow start, but managed to pull out a victory over a talented Hingham team. After falling behind 14-9, the Cohasset girls rallied for an impressive 19-16 victory. The comeback effort was keyed by a strong defensive effort from Marcella Flibotte, Charlotte Morrison, and Caroline Adams.

The scoring was spread out evenly with seven different girls making the stat sheet. Nikki Federle led the way with six points, followed by Abby Osmanski with four. Margot Robbins and Erin McElhinney clinched the victory with fast break baskets late in the game. Charlotte Morrison, Marcella Flibotte, and Clare Glavin rounded out the scoring.

This past Saturday the Super Sixers went up against a very tall Norwell team, but walked away with a 17-10 triumph. Once again the victory was dictated by a strong, swarming defense, led by Tori Ross (who had five steals), Nicky Tolosko, and Audrey Hart, who were everywhere on the defensive end. Norwell was held to three points in the first half thanks to the strong team defensive effort.

The scoring came from five different girls. Osmanski topped the point chart with eight points, four in each half. Federle had four points and Robbins hit an impressive free throw (nothing but net).

The contest once again was a barn burner that came down to the final minutes until a pair of late buckets by Morrison and Flibotte sealed the deal for the Blue & White.

The Super Sixers now stand at 4-7 with three games remaining in the regular season.

The Cohasset girls travel teams are off for the vacation break until next Sunday, February 27, when they host Weymouth at the CHS gym

Jaime Kenney named to Weymouth Club post

Jaime Kenney, whose tennis coaching career over the past decade has spanned the club, high school, and college levels, has been named the Weymouth Club's Director of Adult Tennis.

"I am very excited to be joining the staff at the Weymouth Club and to be able to work with (Director of Tennis) Dave Preston," said Kenney. "There's no question the Weymouth Club offers its members the best facilities in New England, and I am looking forward to helping to provide the members with outstanding programming and customer service."

Most recently, Kenney has served as the assistant women's tennis coach at Tufts University. The Jumbos finished the season with a record-setting 14-5 mark and qualified for both the NESCAC (New England Small College Athletic Conference) and NCAA Tournaments. Among her accomplishments during the season, she coached the Small College doubles champions as well as the NCAA Division III singles champion and doubles semi-finalists. Two of her players earned ITA (Intercollegiate Tennis Association) All-American recognition.

Equally noteworthy, the Tufts women's tennis team was the recipient of the 2010 ITA Team Sportsmanship Award.

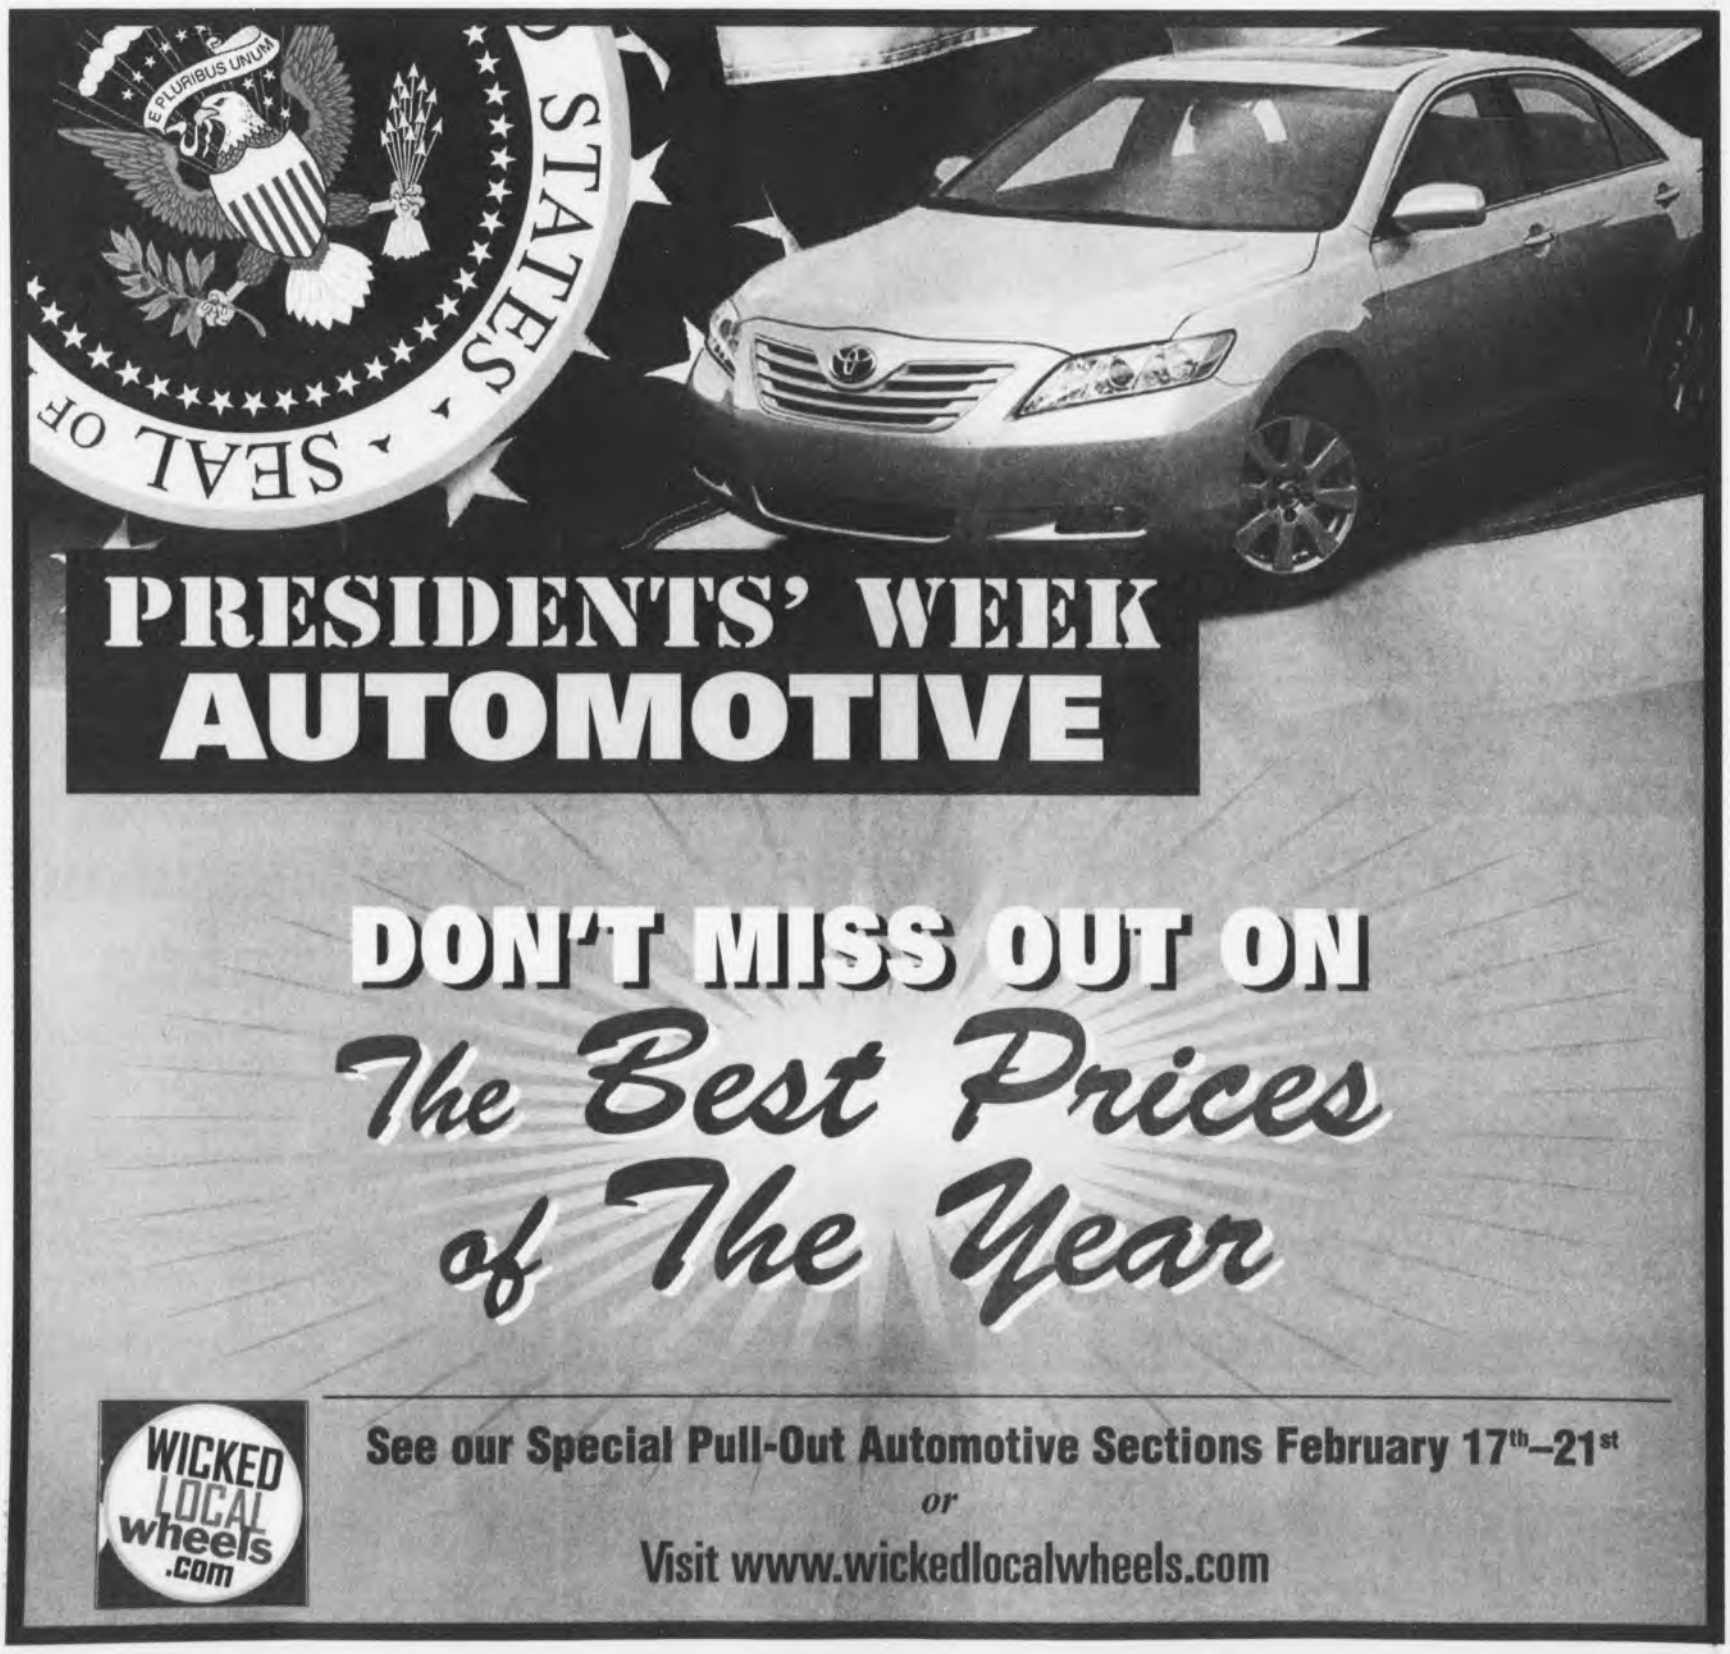
For her accomplishments, Kenney was nominated for the 2010 ITA Assistant Coach of the Year.

Kenney began her coaching career in 2002 at Hingham High School. There, she served four years as the junior varsity coach and two years as the varsity coach. Her overall record during her six-year tenure was 75-21.

Four of her teams won league titles and six times earned berths in the State Tournament. More than 10 of her players earned All-Scholastic honors while twice, her teams were nominated for the Team Sportsmanship Award.

Then, in 2007, Kenney left Hingham High School to take over as the varsity girls coach at Milton Academy.

During her tenure there, her overall record was 27-5. The 2008 team was undefeated and won the ISL (Independent School League) title. Then, in 2009, the team was an ISL finalist.



She coached the ISL Player and Rookie of the Year and six of her players were named to the All-ISL Team.

Then, in 2009, Kenney moved to Tufts University.

She has also been involved in Club tennis having served as the Manager of Team Tennis and tennis pro at the Cohasset Tennis Club. She has been involved in many aspects of the tennis program there from coaching adult teams to adult programming, scheduling, and event planning for the Club that services over 500 members.

GREAT SWIM

Cohasset's Clarke Indek gets off the block during a meet earlier this season. Indek's season will continue in the MIAA Div. 2 State Meet at Harvard this weekend. Indek qualified to swim the backstroke with a fourth-place finish at Sectionals at MIT. Other swimmers who qualified were Hope Kissick in breaststroke and the 200m freestyle Relay team of Moira Donohue, Aniko Haber, Kissick, and Maggie Littlejohn.

ed two years ago. It helps when you have good players who work hard."

Earlier in the week, Cohasset knocked off Harwich 62-35 for as season sweep, and the Skippers beat Rockland 60-54 last week and downed Norwell 54-35 on Friday night.

In that game, Robert Jones scored his 1,000th career point to close out the third quarter of the win.

Jones scored 10 against Harwich, while Shane Haggerty led the charge with 15 points. Ten of Cohasset's 12 players scored in the game, which Cohasset led 36-13 at the half.

The Skippers held the lead and were able to get playing time for their solid bench, including Chris Murphy, Joe Buckley, Rocco Laugelle and Chris Davis.

"We got them all into the rotation early," Ruggiero said. "Hopefully that will help our bench strength."

In the Abington loss, Richardson scored a career-high 27 points, Jones and Haggerty each scored 18 and Cohasset led most of the game.

The close nature was revealed in the numbers.

Cohasset hit 23 shots from the floor with nine three-pointers. Abington made 20 shots, also with 9 three-pointers.

The big difference was at the free throw line where Abington outscored Cohasset 12-5 with a 12-for-17 night. The Skippers made 5-of-9 from the stripe.

"If we had held on one or two possessions we could have won," Ruggiero said. "Abington is a good team. They made the tournament with that win."

While the loss was tough, the Skippers aren't looking back.

"We came back and had a terrific practice," Ruggiero said. "They're upbeat and excited about the championship game on Friday."

The TV crew is expected about 5 p.m. with the JV game starting at 5 p.m.

The varsity game is at 6:30.

Students are encouraged to get to the game at 5 p.m. and wear white Cohasset T-shirts.

The next step

LeVangie, who recently won his 800th career game, spread through three sports, said his team will continue to work hard to get ready for the tournament, where they have had plenty of success in recent years.

"It helps that we've been in big games before," he said. "The seniors have been to the Garden, UMass, Bridgewater-Raynham, Braintree. Over the last four years they've won about 90 games."

Also helping Cohasset when the tournament rolls around is the fact that they don't hide from good competition.

Their slate of non-league games include Div. 1 teams like Brookline and other top teams from around the state, including Newburyport.

The plan for the next few weeks is simple.

"We're still practicing," LeVangie said. "We'll have a couple of days off and have a scrimmage. Then we have a game with Harwich right before the seedings. We'll work hard and stay motivated."

Weekend of champions

it all shook out in the end; the team that works hard gets the trophy and I thought that was the case in this scenario."

During the day, John Mills (Soph) scored points for Cohasset with a win in his first match, but was knocked out of the tournament afterwards. Harry Braga (Jr) was unfortunately bumped out due to an injury in his first match. Michael Yerardi, the eighth grade heavyweight, didn't taste victory but had the chance to see what the competition is like at that level.

Chandler Skolnick, a freshman, stepped in at 135 lbs to score for Cohasset by winning his match with a pin.

"Overall, it was just some really good wrestling," said Sweeney. "Harry Helbock taking sixth as a freshman was great, we had a real good team effort, and I'm very pleased with how we came out in the end getting second."

All three of the Cohasset champions are seeded third in the upcoming State tournament this Friday and Saturday, February 18-19th, at Holliston High School.

"It should give them an opportunity to win some matches and possibly get to the finals, it all depends on how well they train this week and how well they wrestle this Friday and Saturday."

"At that level you just can't have a bad day, you can't have a bad match," he warns, "one bad match and you're out of the tournament."

"So, they're going to have to be on their toes," Sweeney remarks.

Cohasset will be working out with Weymouth this week before departing for the State Tournament early in the day on Friday.

"I think we'll do well," Sweeney says with a smile.

"We'll take one weekend at a time, and we'll see what happens."

An outstanding beginning

FROM GIRLS HOCKEY, PAGE 17

"It took some time to develop a routine and find comfort," she said. "For the majority of the season we practiced two days a week in Hingham right after school and played one game. Because of our new beginning we played a Junior Varsity schedule. We played Walpole twice, Marshfield, Bourne/Mashpee/ Wareham, Marthas Vineyard, Sandwich and Notre Dame. Each game showed progress and was proof that as we found comfort on the ice and learned the roles on the ice we were well on our way to success."

For many, the sport was a new experience.

"One of the challenges involved was that of the 21 skaters we had, a large majority of them had never played organized hockey," Beal said. "There were 8-10 players that had hockey experience and I would be remiss if I didn't take a moment to thank them for their patience and their willingness to help in every aspect of practice and game play. It was difficult to adjust practices to the varying skating ability but everyone took responsibility for themselves and had the opportunities to work on their skills."

Former Cohasset lacrosse coach and Hanover parent Kevin Orcutt volunteered his time almost on a daily basis to get on the ice with the girls which helped the program's growth tremendously.

Cohasset High School teacher/coach Pete Afanasiw was also able to volunteer on a regular basis to assist in the program's development.

"Having three coaches on the ice was a very efficient use of time and helped us to take some very big steps," Beal said. "Most of our concentration was defensive positioning and transitional puck movement because in the games that we played in it is the area we felt we could use the most improvement. It was really great the way the schedule worked out and that we were able to face a variety of teams."

Cohasset/Hanover played seven games and ended up winning three and losing four.

"The games were a great way for the kids who had never played before to experience how fast the game was and how physical it can be," Beal said. "You could see their confidence grow after each experience. I am very pleased and very proud of all of these girls, they have been a pleasure to work with. As for the future of this program I think you've only just seen the tip of the iceberg and in the years to come it's going to be really exciting."

Cohasset players were: Amanda Farren, Nicole Farren, Sophie Arnold, Melissa Campedelli, Makayla Barrow, Frannie Genello, Lauren McLellan, Jenny Curley, Sara Corry, Meaghan Kearney, Mackenzie Nolan, Alexandra Russell, Kylie Coffman, Arianna Tosi and Charlotte Barszewski.

Hanover players wereJulia Dares, Courtney Sepeck, Taylor Graf, Kelsey Orcutt, Mackenzie Dunphy, Whitney Joy and Erin Leonard.

Lots of promise

FROM BOYS HOCKEY, PAGE 17

second of the night ending the period with Cohasset on top 4-2.

Less than three minutes into the third, Tommy O'Brien scored his second goal; this time assisted by junior defenseman and assistant captain Sean McKenna putting the Skippers up 5-2 when at 10:50 of the third, Boothman scored his hat-trick goal but it was too little, too late with the Skippers ending "Senior Night" 5-3.

"It's easy to see why this year's SSVT team is their league leaders," remarked Walsh. "They show up ready to play and gave everything they had to the effort. Sometimes that's all a coach can ask for."

The Skippers clinched their tournament berth on February 6 and are now playing for a good seed position.

They faced off against Mansfield, (No. 2 seed of Division 2), on Thursday evening at Foxboro and host Mashpee Saturday night at 8 p.m. at Connell Rink.

The Skippers follow that game with a game at Rockland on Monday at 1:30 p.m.

Cohasset closes the regular season on Feb. 24 against Old Rochester at Tabor Academy.

LIFE AT CHS

NATALIE DIGNAM

Happy (belated) Valentine's Day CHS! If no one was there to give you chocolates this year, at least the lunch ladies made those special sprinkle cookies. And speaking of this made up Hallmark holiday, you may be wondering why we celebrate it. St. Valentine is a real saint, but next to nothing is known about his life except that he was buried in northern Rome on February 14th, and soon after an annual feast was held to commemorate his death. But the way I see it, if someone gives you roses or buys you some special sprinkle cookies from the cafeteria, you shouldn't complain.

But what's really special at CHS this week is the Valentine's edition of the Spinnaker, which came out Thursday and only costs $1. Also Thursday was the Fall Sports Award Meeting, an annual meeting that is held during to school to celebrate CHS athletes who have been recognized as exceptional. CHS has no shortage of great athletes, evident in the successful seasons this winter. Both the girls' and boys' basketball teams have made the playoffs and Robert Jones is the fifth player in CHS history to have a career total of over 1,000 points. And this Friday and Saturday the wrestling team will be looking to end a strong season at the South Sectional Finals in Holliston. Good luck to Gus Helbock, Graden Foley, Derek Froio, Nick Tangerlini, Thomas Flibotte, and Alex Kinnealy. Also congratulations to Graham Bell and Kimani Hal-Sadaam, who will be attending as alternates.

Moving away from sports, senioritis combined with high hopes for February vacation have made it extremely hard for students to deal with a full week of school, especially after becoming accustomed to so many snow days. In our general frustration, we have begun tearing up the floor tiles to make room for a 4-Square court in the science hallway. But really, the faulty floor tiles have fallen victim to some cleaning fluid and will be replaced next year. Also next year, no decisions have been made, but the process for choosing a new superintendent is well under way (or so I've heard from some inside sources). In the nearer future, Mr. Skipper will be held on March 11th, so it's probably time to start thinking about a "talent"... even if that is just making balloon animals. As one seasoned participant puts it, "it'll be a grand contest of skills and charisma!" That's all for this week, Happy (belated) Valentine's Day and enjoy February vacation!

SALOME'S STARS
FOR RELEASE WEEK OF
FEB. 28, 2011

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) Whatever decisions you're faced with this week, rely on your strong Aries instincts, and base them on your honest feelings, not necessarily on what others might expect you to do.

TAURUS (April 30 to May 20) Your sensitive Taurean spirit is pained by what you feel is an unwarranted attack by a miffed colleague. But your sensible self should see it as proof that you must be doing something right.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) More fine-tuning might be in order before you can be absolutely certain that you're on the right track. Someone close to you might offer to help. The weekend favors family get-togethers.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) The week continues to be a balancing act 'twixt dreaming and doing. But by week's end, you should have a much better idea of what you actually plan to do and how you plan to do it.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) Changing your plans can be risky, but it can also be a necessary move. Recheck your facts before you act. Tense encounters should ease by midweek, and all should be well by the weekend.

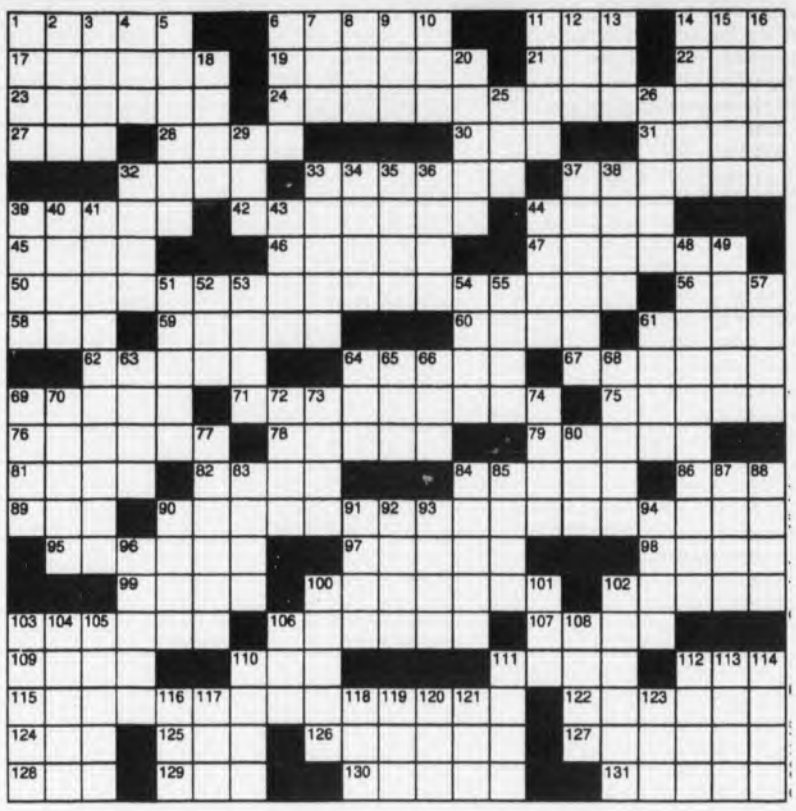
VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) You might still be trying to adjust to recent changes. But things should improve considerably as you get to see some positive results. An uneasy personal matter calls for more patience.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) Congratulations. Your good intentions are finally recognized, and long-overdue appreciation should follow. Keep working toward improvements wherever you think they're necessary.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 2) Try to look at your options without prejudging any of them. Learn the facts, and then make your assessments. Spend the weekend enjoying films, plays and musical events.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) Someone might want to take advantage of the Sagittarian's sense of fair play. But before you ride off to right what you've been told is a wrong, be sure of your facts.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) You might be surprised to learn that not everyone agrees with your ideas. But this can prove to be a good thing. Go over them and see where improvements can be made.



AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) After taking advice on a number of matters in recent months, expect to be called on to return the gesture. And, by the way, you might be surprised at who makes the request.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) Reassure everyone concerned that a change of mind isn't necessarily a change of heart. You might still want to pursue a specific goal, but feel a need to change the way you'll get there.

BORN THIS WEEK:

Fun By The Numbers

Like puzzles? Then you'll love sudoku. This mind-bending puzzle will have you hooked from the moment you square off, so sharpen your pencil and put your sudoku savvy to the test!

Here's How It Works:

Sudoku puzzles are formatted as a 9x9 grid, broken down into nine 3x3 boxes. To solve a sudoku, the numbers 1 through 9 must fill each row, column and box. Each number can appear only once in each row, column and box. You can figure out the order in which the numbers will appear by using the numeric clues already provided in the boxes. The more numbers you name, the easier it gets to solve the puzzle!

Syncopation to perform at First Parish

Syncopation, an award-winning vocal jazz quartet based in Boston, will perform an a cappella program at First Parish Cohasset at 3 p.m. Sunday, Feb. 20. First Parish is located on the green at North Main St. Admission will be $15 for adults and $12 for seniors and children. Children are welcome at this upbeat concert.

Like those legendary vocal groups, Syncopation performs jazz and pop music in four-part harmony with a style that is both timeless and up-to-the-minute. As an added treat, each of the singers also plays an instrument or two, like trumpet, trombone, piano, and percussion, providing the excitement of a band much larger in size.

You may have seen Syncopation on WBZ-TV singing with the Boston Pops on their Fourth of July Fireworks Spectacular in 2009. The group often performs with instrumental accompaniment of piano, bass and drums, but they are equally renowned for their a cappella singing, which has earned them regional and national awards from Harmony Sweepstakes.

In its inception, Syncopation was mentored by Cheryl Bentyne of the Manhattan Transfer. Their first album, "A New Dance," featured contributions from bebop trombone legend Phil Wilson, formidable jazz fusion trumpeter Tiger Okoshi, and Paul Stiller of the groundbreaking vocal group Vox One.

After signing a record contract with Geneon Entertainment in Japan, Syncopation's album Of Blue was recorded in Tokyo with some of Japan's hottest jazz musicians such as pianist Satoru "Salt" Shionoya.

Syncopation performs jazz and pop music in four-part harmony with a style that is both timeless and up-to-the-minute.

You may have seen Syncopation on WBZ-TV singing with the Boston Pops on their Fourth of July Fireworks Spectacular in 2009.

"On Wonderful You," Syncopation's most recent CD, the group interprets pop songs from the past 40 years. R&B, soul, folk, fusion and electropop are transformed by jazz harmonies, rhythms and style. "A unique spin on classic syncopated music with great voices," says Jordan Rich (WBZ).

A collaboration with Gold and Platinum Award-winning producer Anthony Resta has produced several Syncopation singles which have been released as digital downloads.

Syncopation has performed at the Tanglewood Jazz Festival, the Tri-C Vocal Jazz Festival, the Boston Globe Jazz Festival, the Meihou Music Festival in Japan, and the International Association for Jazz Education Conference. The group regularly plays jazz clubs in New England like Scullers, Ryles, the Hi-Hat, the Sahara Club, and the Press Room. Media appearances have included radio (WBZ, Jordan Rich; WBUR, Robin Young's Here and Now; WGBH, Eric Jackson's Eric in the Evening) and TV (CN8's Backstage with Sara Edwards).

All About Jazz calls Syncopation "a thoroughly modern, bright, and fresh take on ensemble jazz vocals that effectively updates the entire genre."

Childhood dream comes true

Leigh plays Mary Poppins in Boston production

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

Steffanie Leigh has been preparing for her current role – starring as the title character in the musical "Mary Poppins," which opens this week at the Boston Opera House – since childhood.

"I can remember loving 'Mary Poppins' from the time I was a little girl growing up in Oregon. My grandparents had the movie on laser disc and I think I wore it out because I watched it so many times," explained Leigh by telephone from Nebraska recently. "I sang the songs from the movie, too, and imagined that I might be playing this role someday."

After several months understudying the part of the magical nanny who flies in, umbrella up and ready, when needed, Leigh assumed the lead in the musical based on the stories of P. L. Travers and the classic 1964 Walt Disney film earlier this month in Omaha.

"I am very excited to be taking over this role. In a very real sense, however, it can be daunting to do this show, because the measuring stick of Julie Andrews and the amazing work she did in the movie is very high. Our show's creative team has helped me, however, by being very encouraging of my portrayal. I feel an obligation to do certain things certain ways because of the film, but I also feel freedom to tell the story our way. Our story is a little different from the movie, too, because it is based on various vignettes from P. L. Travers' books."

The multi-award-winning stage version of "Mary Poppins" received its worldwide premiere at the Prince Edward Theatre in London's West End in December 2004. The Broadway production opened at the New Amsterdam Theatre two years later. Both productions were directed by Richard Eyre with co-direction and choreography by Tony Award-winner Matthew Bourne. The musical features the Academy Award winning music and lyrics of Richard M. Sherman and Robert B. Sherman, as well as additional music by George Stiles and Anthony Drew.

In the movie and now on stage, the self-confident Mary swoops in to Number 17 Cherry Tree Lane to help Mr. and Mrs. Banks with their children, Jane and Michael. Helping Mary out is her good friend, Bert the chimney sweep, played on film by Dick Van Dyke and now on stage by original Broadway company member Nicolas Dromard.

"In this stage production, Bert is the narrator so he is the glue that holds the whole show together. He is hopelessly in love with Mary," said Dromard by telephone recently. "It is very exciting when we bring in a new actor to a leading role and so to have Steffanie join us as Mary is just wonderful. Steffanie is my fifth Mary and I am delighted to welcome her to the role."

Like Leigh, Dromard – who has played Bert on Broadway and the road and who previously played Boston in "Mamma Mia!" and "Wicked" – remembers discovering the film at an early age, but says he hasn't watched it recently.

"As a kid, I thought the movie was just magical. I can't watch it now for fear I might start doing Dick Van Dyke. The wonderful thing about doing this show, however, is that our director made it clear from the beginning that he didn't want any of us to copy anything done by Dick Van Dyke or Julie Andrews. We have a different story, and some different music, too."

In any form, "Mary Poppins" means a memorable story and irresistible music – you may not be able to spell "Supercalifragilisticexpialidocious" but you will sing along, and who among us would ever turn down "A Spoonful of Sugar"? It also means some very special effects that both Dromard and Leigh clearly enjoy.

"My favorite number is 'Step in Time.' It has everything you could ever want in an 11-minute tap dance number. It starts slow then it builds to the point where I am dancing upside down," says Dromard, who politely declines to explain just how that it is possible. "Let's just say it's all done with fairy dust and Disney magic."

Leigh spends some of her character's most memorable moments a loft.

"I fly three times, including one time over the audience at the end of the show. As an understudy, I played the role several times and taking flight over the audience was different in every city. It takes a tremendous amount of trust to be hooked up to something that allows you to fly over the audience. I love the flying, though, even when I'm a little scared. I can see people really well, too, so I know who is paying attention and who's texting."

Disney and Cameron Mackintosh will present "Mary Poppins" at Boston Opera House, 539 Washington St., Boston, Feb. 17 through March 20. For tickets, visit the box office, call 800-982-2787 or go online at BroadwayAcrossAmerica.com/Boston.

Dromard to give 'Mary Poppins' master class on South Shore

Nicolas Dromard will take part in a master class on the music and dance of "Mary Poppins" on Sunday, March 6, at Center Stage in Quincy as part of J.M. Productions' "Rising Stars" series.

"I love teaching and giving back to kids who want to be performers. I did a few of these classes when I was playing Fiyero in 'Wicked' and I am thrilled that I am going to get to do another one next month."

Dromard – who plays Bert in "Mary Poppins" – will offer vocal instruction while the show's dance captain, Geoffrey Goldberg, will teach sections of "Step in Time," the high-energy tap-dancing chimney sweep production number, and more.

The classes are open to students from second through 12th grades, and will take place 9:30 to 11 a.m., with a special performance for families and friends at 11:30 a.m. at Center Stage, 152 Franklin St., Quincy. Quick Flicks

127 HOURS (R) Thrilling true tale about mountain climber Aron Ralston (James Franco), who had to amputate a limb after getting trapped under a boulder in Utah. Director Danny Boyle does a great job of giving a static story some kinetic energy. The pivotal moment is as disturbing as you feared. But the emotional impact of the film is far greater than any gore: The ending will have you crying like a baby. (A-)

ALL GOOD THINGS (PG-13) "All Good Things" must end, but it can't end soon enough. This is the strange but true story of suspected triple murderer Robert Durst, the cross-dressing sociopath and former heir to a vast New York City real estate empire. Squeezing 23 years into two hours leaves no room for the film to breathe. Director Andrew Jarecki likes to shock, but he did it far more effectively with his documentary "Capturing the Friedmans." (C)

ANOTHER YEAR (PG-13) Mike Leigh fans, rejoice! The director has made another little gem of an art film, this time with little-known Lesley Manville delivering a searing portrayal of an aging, lonely woman desperate to be a part of a perfect family. The London-set drama is subtle, tender and closely observed — all the qualities we rarely find in films. (A-)

BARNEY'S VERSION (R) Paul Giamatti won a Golden Globe for best comedy actor for his role in this tale about an ordinary man living an extraordinary life. (Not Reviewed)

BLACK SWAN (R) Director Darren Aronofsky's dark view of the ballet world. Natalie Portman plays a ballerina who may lose her starring role in "Swan Lake" unless she can unleash the seductress within. The alluring Mila Kunis plays a dancer in the wings, ready to steal the role. But the film is about more than backstage politics. Aronofsky provides a graphic depiction of the anguish — physical and emotional — that comes with being an artist. (A-)

BLUE VALENTINE (R) Romance is easy; marriage is hard. And Ryan Gosling and Michelle Williams prove it in this drama that's so real it's hard to watch. You'll gawk at the wreckage of a marriage that has simply and subtly gone wrong. The film makes the case that there's little difference between falling in love and falling into the abyss. (A-)

BIUTIFUL (R) A ponderous film about an unlikable guy who's scrambling to get his life together before cancer kills him. The film is so doomed that even Javier Bardem in the lead role can't save it. (C-)

THE COMPANY MEN (R) Ben Affleck, Chris Cooper and Tommy Lee Jones are all spot-on as businessmen who are forced to re-evaluate their lives after they are laid off from their corporate jobs. Affleck has never been better, playing a smug executive who suddenly takes stock in his family after suffering the humiliation of losing his job. And Cooper will break your heart. (A-)

COUNTRY STRONG (PG-13) Gwyneth Paltrow plays a drunken country diva whose money-grubbing husband (Tim McGraw) tries to resurrect her washed-up career. The problem is that the film loses focus on that story and gets distracted elsewhere. And there's plenty of problems to consider in this light-weight version of last year's "Crazy Heart" — infidelity, addiction, marital woes, grief, loss and a sick kid who's the game changer. Somehow, writer/director Shana Feste takes all that and turns it into something tedious. (D)

THE DILEMMA (PG-13) In this tactless, humorless slog of a comedy, Ronny (Vince Vaughn) catches the wife of his friend (Kevin James) in a kiss with another man. The film is one of those little disasters that tend to pop up in theaters this time of year. And now it's official: Vaughn's rapid-fire shtick has become tiresome. (D)

Turkey Hill turbine approved with conditions; appeal likely

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

On Wednesday night, the Planning Board made history by approving the first wind turbine in Cohasset history.

Not without controversy, the turbine will sit close to the apex of Turkey Hill and potentially impact residences in both Cohasset and Hingham.

The single wind turbine will stand 410-feet tall, including the height of the blades, and is projected to produce enough energy to power all the Trustees of Reservations' buildings throughout Massachusetts with some to spare.

The project approval, which was unanimous, comes with a host of conditions the Planning Board feel is needed to ensure a safe project that complies with the town's bylaws throughout the life of the structure.

The board spent about three hours on Wednesday discussing the conditions ranging from monitoring shadow flicker and sound post-construction to putting up a barrier around the turbine in the winter to ensuring there is money to remove the turbine at the end of its useful life.

Despite the Planning Board's effort to place conditions on the project, members said it was almost assured the project would be appealed.

Golden Living Center, the closest and potentially only, Cohasset residence impacted by the wind turbine has sent a letter indicating their intent to sue, unless the Trustees agree to pay for an independent expert to evaluate the adverse health effects the wind turbine would have on the elderly residents of Golden Living, a nursing home facility.

The decision could also be appealed by the nearby Turkey Hill neighborhood in Hingham. Several Hingham residents – and their lawyer – spoke against the project and requested more time to review the issues and potential impacts on their

Mashpee mother pens complaint after CHS game

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

On Friday night the Cohasset High gymnasium was packed with more than 800 fans. The game was a big one – the South Shore League Championship for boys basketball was on the line against Mashpee High.

After a very close game, the Cohasset High team and fans walked away victorious and jubilant.

A member of the Mashpee community, on the other hand, had a different experience at Cohasset High Friday night. In a letter to the Superintendent Denise Walsh and others, Mashpee mother Meredith Kilpatrick describes a host of unsportsmanlike conduct by Cohasset students attending the game.

"The Mashpee student athletes, coaches, staff and parents as guests in your facility were treated to a disheartening array of ill-mannered, unprofessional, unsportsmanlike and hostile behaviors," Kilpatrick wrote.

She offers examples of the conduct from Cohasset students turning their back on the court while Mashpee athletes were introduced to rude chants throughout the game, some that singled out particular players, and a confrontation between Cohasset students and Mashpee students in the parking lot after the game.

"I watched the unsportsmanlike conduct escalate and somebody has to stand up and say enough is enough," Kilpatrick said in a phone interview this week.

With two teenagers Kilpatrick said she has attended dozens of football and basketball games over the years and this game went well beyond the spirit and energy at a high stakes high school game.

"I'm just as loud as the next parent when it comes to getting into the game and cheering…but this mean-spirited taunts and chants almost bordered on bullying," Kilpatrick said.

Athletic Director Ron Ford declined to comment on the contents of the letter, but said he was disappointed there was a perception Cohasset athletes and high school were unsportsmanlike.

"I don't want anyone to feel there is a lack of sportsmanship at Cohasset or feel they were mistreated in any way," Ford said.

As a result, Ford is taking steps to

Slanetz says choices aren't super

Wants search for new school chief to continue

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Next week the School Committee will deliberate on the three choices for the next superintendent.

At an Advisory Committee meeting on Tuesday night, School Committee vice chair Alfred Slanetz said he was not prepared to vote for any of the finalist candidates.

"All the candidates are solid educators and nice people, but not one of them has the breadth of experience to lead the district into the next level," Slanetz said.

Slanetz and School Committee member Paul Schubert were at the Advisory Committee meeting to present the school budget proposal. Toward the end of the discussion one of the Advisory Committee members asked about the superintendent search.

"In my view what we want is a leader to take this school to the next level in a fairly conservative, fiscally savvy manner," Slanetz said, adding he did not think the candidates had the experience to do that.

"In the operating environment we will see in the next few years we need someone who is pretty seasoned," Slanetz said.

"All the candidates are solid educators and nice people, but not one of them has the breadth of experience to lead the district into the next level."

— Vice Chairman Alfred Slanetz, School Committee

Schubert said the middle of the school year search for a superintendent was not optimal for attracting a strong field of candidates.

"I think whoever we hire will not be at the level of the current superintendent," Schubert said.

Slanetz felt the school's search consultant NESDEC (New England School Development Council), was not proactive enough in recruiting candidates.

"For a school of our caliber we should have been able to attract more and better candidates," Slanetz said. "Personally I'm going to recommend we go out again to search."

Slanetz is not the only one calling for another search. Former School Committee member Adrienne MacCarthy called for the school committee to continue looking for a school leader in a letter to the editor that appeared in the Mariner last week

It's unclear that the School Committee will consider Slanetz's request, but plans are to deliberate on the candidates at their Wednesday, March 2 meeting. That meeting will be the first time the School Committee will have deliberated on the finalists.

The superintendent finalist candidates include: Barbara Cataldo, current assistant superintendent in Milford, Mass.; James Kelleher, current assistant superintendent in Scituate; and Kimberly Shaver-Hood, superintendent of schools for Blackstone/Millville Regional.

The School Committee is looking to replace Superintendent of Schools Denise Walsh who decided not to renew her contract after the current school year. She has served as the head of Cohasset Schools for six years.

The School Committee interviewed all the candidates two weeks ago in public meetings.

The committee will deliberate and vote on their choice for the next superintendent at their meeting Wednesday, March 2.

PICTURE THIS/Bob Walsh

Name: Bob Walsh.

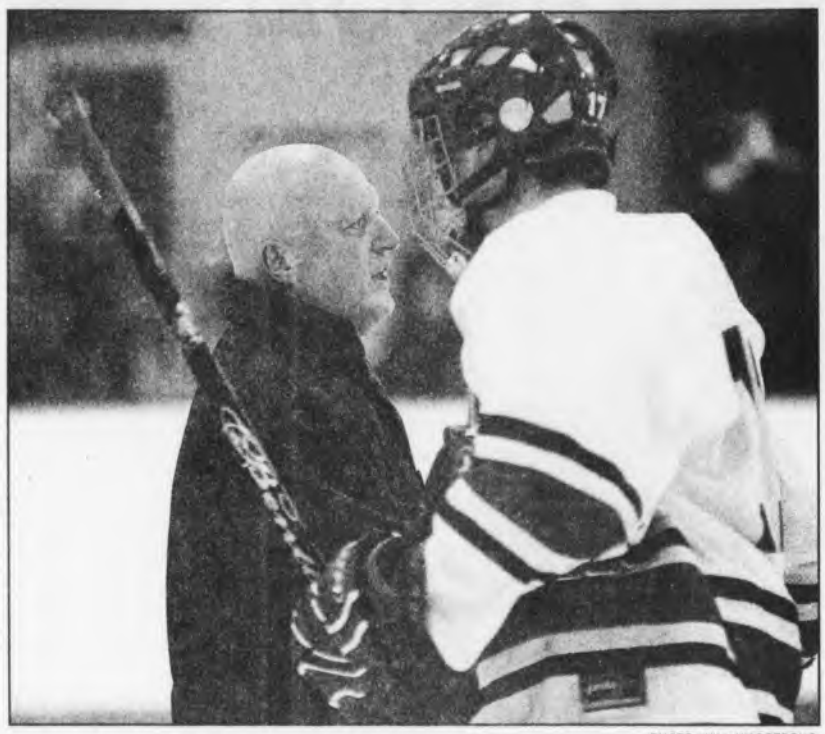
Occupation: Cohasset High School Hockey Coach.

Best day of your life: I have several "Best Days" so I'll give you my top 5. #1 The day I met my wife; #2 The birth of my daughter, Jenn; #3 The birth of my son, Bobby; #4 The day my daughter got married; and #5 The anticipated birth of my first grandchild (within the next few days).

Best vacation: The best vacation was any one that we went to Disney World. It's fun to be goofy!

Favorite season: Hockey. No, not winter…just hockey season. Otherwise, the fall is the best in New England.

Favorite junk food or meal: No junk but I love a good steak… and popcorn, yeah, popcorn is good too!



Best book: "Sleepers" by Lorenzo Carcaterra.

Best movie or actor: Best Movie: "Miracle" / Best Series: "Band of Brothers" / Favorite Actor: Big John Wayne fan.

Best TV show: I have a few. "NCIS," "Blue Bloods," "Burn Notice," (is this a re-occurring theme?).

Favorite music, song, group or artist: I basically like all music but still love The Beatles, The Moody Blues and Frank Sinatra.

Pet peeve: People who don't listen or care.

Cohasset High School hockey coach Bob Walsh has a friendly word with a Rockland player after the Skippers versus Bulldogs game Monday afternoon at the Rockland Ice Arena. For coverage of the game, see sports.

Most embarrassing moment: Oh… So many to choose from… Perhaps the time, what I call an "F-Troop moment." I was coaching a hockey team when I pulled the goalie because I thought the ref was calling a delayed penalty on the other team. I put the extra skater on the ice and we scored…that's right… the eventual game winning goal. The thing was, the ref wasn't actually calling a penalty. He was merely putting his arm up because the play was close to him; he was trying to protect himself. Sometimes it is better to be lucky than good!

Goal: My life goal is to make a positive difference in the lives of those around me.

Person you'd most like to meet: The list is long and distinguished but, in an effort to keep it light, probably Tom Hanks. His success as a comedian, actor, and director has been well marked but, in addition, his dedication to the veterans who have proudly served our country, particularly during WWII. (I also think Sheriff Woody is a riot!)

Biggest worry: Falling short of my goals, promises and responsibilities or letting my family down.

Best part of Cohasset: I'm a sucker for the small town feel, small quaint shops and a feeling like I stepped back in time about 40 years.

POLICE BEAT

Mercedes stolen from driveway

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Police said a 2010 black Mercedes Benz stolen from Tad Lane sometime after 10 p.m. on Friday (Feb. 18) was spotted traveling north on Route 93 in Dorchester around 2 a.m. by a State Trooper on patrol. The Trooper ran a routine check on the plate but the car had not yet been entered as stolen. State police did not stop the car.

Police said the 58-year-old Cohasset woman, who owns the car, reported it stolen on Saturday morning (Feb. 19) at about 9:23 a.m. She reported hearing something during the night but thought nothing of it. Police said the car was unlocked with the keys inside. Inside the car were checkbooks and a digital camera, among other items.

At 9:36 a.m. on Saturday (Feb. 19), another Tad Lane resident, age 43, reported her unlocked, 2001 Honda CRV had been entered overnight. Nothing was missing but the glove box and car had been rummage through, police said.

Police say the two incidents are related. There are no leads at this time. Police urge residents to lock their cars and homes.

Summons

An officer on patrol on South Main Street at 7:53 p.m. last Monday (Feb. 14) observed a 2002 Dodge pickup heading north at a high rate of speed. The pickup was clocked on radar as traveling 42 in a 25 mph zone, police said. The officer pulled over the truck and the operator was identified as a 53-year-old Scituate man. A check with the registry revealed the plates had been revoked for insurance purposes. The Scituate man is being summonsed to court for operating after revocation of registration, operating without insurance and speeding. The pickup was towed.

Brookline case

A 39-year-old Cohasset woman, whose identity relating to her banking information has been compromised is working with Brookline police where the crime occurred. Brookline contacted Cohasset last week about delivering a message to the victim, police said.

Summons

An officer on patrol on North Main Street by the Little League fields at about 11:43 a.m. on Monday (Feb. 14) observed a 2003 Nissan Maxima traveling at a high rate of speed and clocked it on radar as going 45 in a 30 mph zone. The officer stopped the car and identified the operator as a 47-year-old woman from Carver. A computer check with the registry revealed her license had been suspended for non-payment of a speeding ticket. She is being summonsed to court for operating after license suspension and speeding. Her car was towed, police said.

Hit & run

An elderly woman from Scituate went to the Cohasset Police Station last week to report that she thought the dent in her car might have occurred while she was parked at Stop & Shop. However, she said the damage could have occurred someplace else. Police told her it was best if she notified her insurance company.

Car break-in

A 72-year-old Cohasset woman, who had been working out at First Fitness off King Street, returned to her 2002 Volkswagen Jetta in the parking lot last Thursday (Feb. 17) to find that someone had entered her unlocked car and stolen $120 from her purse that was on the front seat. The thief apparently took the money and took off, police said.

Overheard

A Cohasset caller told police last week he had knowledge that an employee of his had made threats that he planned to get a gun and kill someone at three worksites, Worcester, Weymouth and Rockland, because he was upset over the fact his car was towed while he was at work. Police notified the appropriate police departments about the threats.

Summons

An officer on patrol on South Main Street stopped a 2007 Nissan Maxima for speeding (40 in a 25 mph zone) last Friday (Feb. 18) at about 9:30 a.m. A registry check revealed the operator, a 42-year-old Cohasset man, did not have a Massachusetts license. He is being summonsed to court for unlicensed operation and speeding. His passenger took custody of the car and therefore, the car was not towed, police said.

Out late

Five teens were taken home to their parents after a concerned citizen notified police about suspicious activity at 1:06 a.m., Saturday (Feb. 19) in the area of Jerusalem Road and Deep Run. Police said the kids had apparently snuck out and were out walking late.

Missing woman

Hull police put out a "Be On the Lookout" (BOLO) last Saturday at 6:25 a.m. for a 26-year-old Hull woman who had left a note and her pocketbook in her motor vehicle at Nantasket Beach the day before. Hull police and the Coast Guard searched the area. Search dogs were brought to Nantasket Beach but lost her scent near the water.

Cohasset police checked all Cohasset beaches. The woman later went to the Hull police with a friend; she was unharmed.

Intoxicated

A 25-year-old Marshfield man who had attended a wedding earlier at the Barn at the Red Lion Inn where he apparently lost his shoes was taken into protective custody overnight at 12:23 a.m. on Sunday morning (Feb. 20), after the Red Lion called to report a "disorderly person" at the front desk. Police said the man kept saying he just wanted his shoes and to go home. Some of the wedding party was staying at the inn but this man was not registered, police said. He was held at the police station for the rest of the night.

Checks out

A concerned motorist notified police by cell phone about an erratically driven maroon sedan full of kids that was swerving. Police pulled the car over on Elm Street by the police station. The 19-year-old driver from Weymouth checked out OK but was given a verbal warning. There were a total of four teens in the car, police said.

BUDGET BREAKDOWN

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

$186,542.00

EXTRA in YOUR MARINER

What it is:

Cohasset snow removal costs so far for fiscal year 2011 (not including this past Monday's precipitation).

How much was budgeted:

$125,000

Highlights:

Storms
- Dec. 20, 2010: $22,467
- Dec. 26, 2010: $40,834
- Jan. 13, 2011: $28,545
- Jan. 21, 2011: $23,268
- Jan. 26–27, 2011: $29,519
- Feb. 1-2, 2011: $41,909

TOTAL: $186,542

Costs include:

All snow-related expenses including: overtime, hired contractors, salt, sand, and police details for clearing snow from the downtown area.

A little bit of history:
How has the snow and ice budget and actual cost compared over the past few years?

Fiscal 2008
Appropriated $76,000
Expended $150,862
Fiscal 2009
Appropriated $76,000
Expended $279,111
Fiscal 2010
Appropriated $100,000
Expended $150,921.23
Fiscal 2011
Appropriated $125,000
Expended (so far): $155,270.61

Explanation:

As of Tuesday (Feb. 22) Cohasset has spent $30,270 over the budgeted amount of $125,000 for snow removal. Keep in mind that the normal snowfall amount is 40 inches and more than 60 inches of snow has fallen on Cohasset this season.

Under Massachusetts General Laws, towns are entitled to expend beyond Town Meeting appropriation for snow removal costs provided that they appropriated for the fiscal year at least the same amount that had been appropriated in the previous fiscal year. In Cohasset the Board of Selectmen and the Advisory Committee have to approve the overspending of the snow and ice account (they did so for fiscal 2011 a few weeks ago). Surpluses from other budgetary accounts or other sources of revenue may be used to offset the deficit. If there are no other sources of funds to offset the snow and ice deficit, the snow and ice deficit can be added to next year's tax rate as an amount to be raised over and above the Proposition 2-1/2 limits.

Want to be checked on?

In the event of another severe storm event or the power is out for an extended period of time, would you like to be checked on by public safety officials? The town is compiling a list of residents who may live alone, may be frail or disabled, or otherwise need assistance during an emergency. The list is confidential and anyone can be added. In the event of an emergency, phone calls will be made to those households on the list. The public health nurse, Elder Affairs and police and fire department will be the only ones with access to the list.

To be added to the list contact the Elder Affairs office at 781-383-9112.

Recommendations in audit report weighed

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Over the last year the water department — and the town — has weathered a storm.

The town has spent money and time to get to the bottom of the water crisis. An independent auditor has provided his opinion after spending several months scouring the town's accounting records and interviewing involved parties.

The draft audit report for both the water and sewer departments was presented to the town in early January. While outlining how the town got to the place they are in, the report also made recommendations on how to move forward.

With the information in hand the town now needs to figure out how to ensure something like this never happens again.

Is there a need for more checks and balances? Should the water and sewer commissions be done away with in favor of a combined water and sewer board appointed by the Selectmen? With new people in key positions should the town wait to do something drastic?

These types of questions will be part of an ongoing discussion among town officials – and townspeople – over the next few months.

On Thursday, Feb. 17 the Board of Selectmen, Advisory Committee and representatives from the water and sewer commissions met in a summit meeting to begin the discussion on where to go from here.

"We've clearly gone through a disaster area in a lot of respects. Everyone involved in the management of the town was somewhat lacking in their responsibility," said Advisory Committee chair Sam Wakeman, adding the elected and appointed boards should have been "yelling and screaming" for the information they needed. "The information needed to manage the department was not being provided."

In order to correct the "breakdown in communication," as Selectman Fred Koed described it, there were several ideas put forth. (See sidebar for the recommendation on governance from the auditor.)

There were some who felt the issues faced by the water department and the town were largely based on performance, not because of issues within the governing system. With new people in key positions (a new finance director John Stanbrook started recently, a search for a new town manager is underway and two new water commissioners joined the board in 2010) some felt the town should wait to see if these changes are all that's needed.

"I think we should give it a shot with what we've got. We shouldn't rush into something new and different just for the sake of it," said Nan Roth, an Advisory Committee member.

Other officials felt a change to the oversight of the water and sewer departments was in order. The auditor recommended a five-person selectmen-appointed water and sewer board to oversee the departments. The water and sewer commissions are currently elected with three members each.

Sewer commissioners John Beck and Wayne Sawchuk as well as water commissioners Chris Seebeck and Glenn Pratt all spoke against combining the water and sewer oversight.

Sawchuk went so far as to liken the water and sewer departments to oil and water.

"We don't want to take something that's working (the sewer department) and put it in with something that's not (the water department)," Sawchuk said.

Others thought a water and sewer board was a good idea — as long as the members were elected, not appointed.

"We're literally talking about taking away the voice of the people," said Selectman Koed. "(In the past) somewhere between the Board of Selectmen, Town Manager and the Finance Director, there was a breakdown in communication."

Some town officials wanted to see the combined board also include oversight of the Department of Public Works.

What most of the members of the Board of Selectmen and Advisory Committee did agree on was there is a missing town employee: someone to manage the day-to-day operations of the water and sewer departments. The person would work on behalf of the town to ensure the town is getting what they have paid for from consultants to plant operators.

The position, which was also recommended by the auditor, would provide the commissions with expertise and serve as a buffer between contract professional (engineers, plant operators) and the elected or appointed officials.

"The professionals know how to talk to the engineers, and (the result may be) the town might not need (as much) professional help as we have had in the past," said Selectman Leland Jenkins.

Selectman Ted Carr said finding someone with the right expertise in both water and sewer systems may be difficult.

Yet, Selectmen Chair Karen Quigley was staunch in her support for changing structure and bringing on professionals.

"The town has grown and we are still operating in many areas like a small business – we're not a small business anymore," Quigley said.

The discussion on the governance of both the water and sewer commissions will continue at the individual board level. Anything that would change the set-up of town governance would need to be approved by Town Meeting and possibly on a ballot on a town election.

"We need to figure out what to put to the people," said Wakeman.

Auditor's governance recommendations

✓ Five-member water and sewer board appointed by Selectmen
✓ Position of water and sewer superintendent
✓ Consider town engineer
✓ Re-arrange support staff bringing them under the town umbrella
✓ Assign a business manager of water and sewer (likely the town's finance director/accountant)

The starting point for the discussion at last week's Thursday night joint meeting was the Melanson and Heath audit of the water and sewer departments in draft form. A second document, a report on town government completed by the Massachusetts Municipal Association (MMA) in 2004, was also referenced. Both documents and the PowerPoint presentation from Melanson and Heath auditor John Sullivan is available on the Town of Cohasset website, www.townofcohasset.org.

Unaccounted for water percentage incorrect

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

When the draft audit report was presented in January jaws dropped when the auditor said as much as 40 percent of the water department's water was unaccounted for in any given quarter.

It turns out that number was incorrect.

A letter from the Water Commission to the auditor last week brought to light that the billed water number did not include the substantial Linden Ponds usage.

For the last two fiscal years water delivered to Linden Ponds represented 15 percent (35 million gallons in fiscal 2009) and 22 percent (47 million gallons in fiscal 2010) of total water produced, Water Commissioner Peter DeCaprio wrote in his memo.

"Just eliminating Linden Ponds from the calculations reduces the lost water percentage to 28 percent," DeCaprio stated.

The independent auditor, John Sullivan of Melanson Heath and Company, agreed. In a recent e-mail, Sullivan said he would adjust the water loss tables based on the information provided by the Water Commission for his final draft of the audit report.

The revised schedules show an average lost water of 28 percent over the last two and a half years, with a high of 48 percent and a low of 12 percent, Sullivan said in an e-mail, adding the lower percentage continues to be in months where the usage is very high..

While the water commissioners may have pointed out an inaccuracy in the report, they did not make headway in changing one of the auditor's conclusions. The auditor named, among other things, the large percentage of unaccounted for water as a reason for the water users high water bills.

"The change in numbers does not change our observations and conclusions in the report that unaccounted for water is a major cause of rates being so high in Cohasset," Sullivan stated.

The water commission disagrees.

"To suggest, as he does, that lost water as he calculates it is a significant reason for the high cost of Cohasset water is factually incorrect at best and at worst belies such a superficial level of study and understanding of water department operations that it ought to raise concerns about the entire report," DeCaprio said in his memo to the water audit advisory board.

In a recent interview, Water Commission chairman Chris Seebeck said while the unaccounted for water is a serious problem, it is not one of the primary reasons Cohasset water users have such high rates.

"Eighty-five percent of the water department budget is fixed costs," Seebeck said. The fixed cost number includes debt service and American Water contract operations. That means, he said, the incremental cost to produce more water is not significant.

"The cost to produce water is pretty low," DeCaprio said. He said the escalation of the American Water contract couples with the ramped up debt service payments due to an aggressive capital project plan are the reasons for Cohasset's high water rates.

DeCaprio said re-negotiating the American Water contract and chipping away at the debt service are two primary goals in the coming years.

As a water commission, DeCaprio said, they are aware of many instances where water is lost, but not mysteriously. For example, for years Cohasset water pumped through the Meetinghouse Pond fountain on the Common at a rate of 1.5 million gallons per month, DeCaprio said. A meter has since been place there to monitor the gallons used. Other instances include flows for the hydrant underneath Cunningham Bridge (necessary to keep hydrant lines from freezing), flushing programs and fires.

"The number of actually lost water is materially smaller, probably between 12 and 20 percent is lost through leaks in the system," DeCaprio said.

In a document developed by the Massachusetts Executive Office of Environmental Affairs and the Water Resources Commission in June 2006, it states the industry standard for unaccounted-for water is in the 10 to 15 percent range depending on the reference consulted. It also states that for many public water systems, a significant portion of unaccounted-for water is not water that is wasted, misused or lost, but water that may be used for legitimate purposes but is not accurately measured, or measured at all.

The water department undertook a leak detection program in the early 1990s, but the efforts were suspended this past year because of the department's financial crisis.

Turkey Hill turbine approved with conditions; appeal likely property during the public hearing process.

"The best way to protect the town is to have, in our opinion, the most legally defensible conditions," said Planning Board member Jean Healey Dippold.

The impact of shadow flicker, a strobing effect produced when the sun passes behind the blades of the turbine, was one of the primary concerns of the board.

To ensure the flicker amounts do not exceed the industry standards, the Planning Board conditioned the project to monitor the flicker levels at four different locations: Golden Living Center, the caretaker's house on Turkey Hill, Pheasant Run in Hingham and along Route 228. The flicker should not exceed 30 hours per year or 30 minutes per day at any of these locations, the condition will state. The anticipated most affected locations are Golden Living Center and the caretakers' house.

Noise levels at those four key areas will be monitored for at least a year as well with quarterly reports to the board. If the standards are exceeded then the applicant would need to take steps to mitigate the issue, or the turbine will be shut down.

"We want to make sure once the turbine is up and running it is in line with what was predicted," said John Modzelewski, the Planning Board's consulting engineer.

The Planning Board's conditions also called for a barrier to be erected during the winter months to protect walkers from snow and ice dropping from the blades and the applicant to pay for emergency response training.

The conditions also include a stipulation for the applicant to make "a reasonable effort" to sell excess power to the town. An agreement would need to be negotiated between the applicant and the town. The project will also be subject to real estate taxes.

This project is significant as it is the first to be approved under the town's wind energy conversion facility bylaw, which has been in place since its unanimous approval at town meeting in 2008. Another application was put forth by a private developer for two turbines on Cohasset Heights off Route 3A, but it was ultimately denied by the Planning Board.

Town Counsel will now work to draw up the approval with conditions document over the next few weeks. After the decision is filed with the Town Clerk aggrieved parties have 20 days to appeal the decision.

Mashpee mom upset over 'lack of sportsmanship' build up the relationship between Mashpee and Cohasset. The schools are league rivals and play each other frequently in most sports.

Ford said he is working with the Mashpee athletic director Michael Horne to address some of the issues brought up in the letter.

"I had a good conversation with the Mashpee (athletic director) and I hope this doesn't affect the relationship between the two schools," Ford said.

Ford said Friday night's game came with some tension and energy because the schools was playing for a league championship.

"We don't have total control over what people say in the stands, but when we saw issues we addressed them," Ford said. "Can the kids do better? Can we as leaders do better? Absolutely, and we'll work on that."

In her letter, Kilpatrick asked the superintendent to reprimand, suspend or terminate the staff supervising the game Friday night.

In an e-mail, Superintendent of Schools Denise Walsh said the issue was an internal matter and was being handled by the athletic directors and coaches involved.

"I have confidence in their investigation and handling of the matter," Walsh said.

School Committee member Linda Snowdale made calls almost as soon as she received the letter on Monday.

"I wanted to find out as much information as I could about what happened," Snowdale said, adding she called to talk to Kilpatrick parent to parent.

While the past can't be changed, she said, this is a chance for everyone – students, teachers, administrators, coaches – to reflect on what could be done differently and/or better.

"We should foster a culture of respect, especially when hosting another team at our school," Snowdale said "This is an opportunity to reflect on how to do things better."

Kilpatrick commended the work of the Cohasset Police who helped to diffuse the confrontation in the parking lot.

The Cohasset officer working the paid detail at last Friday's game called for assistance to keep the peace in the parking lot as the large crowd exited the school. There was some taunting between the students, police said. The officers were at the scene for about 25 minutes following the game.

"There were no criminal violations reported to us," Lt. William Quigley said.

Special Town Meeting warrant

The Special Town Meeting scheduled for Monday, March 14 will have one article. The article will deal with covering the $265,000 deficit found in the water department's budget during the recent audit. If approved, the article will ask for a transfer from the stabilization fund to the water department's budget.

In a change from past practice the special town meeting will be held in the high school auditorium. Interim town manager Steve Lombard said he looked up historical data on the attendance at special town meetings over the past few years. Only one had close to 500 attendees, a number the auditorium can handle.

Lombard did have some concerns with the one article warrant in getting a 100-citizen quorum.

"It is an important meeting to be at, if we don't (approve the article) the tax bills won't go out again," Lombard said.

LinkedIn and photo uploads workshops next week at Paul Pratt Library

By Marylou Lawrence
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Looking for a job today is a far different experience than it was eight years ago, before the inception of LinkedIn, the business-oriented social networking site that operates the world's largest professional network on the Internet.

For job seekers and businesses, Diane Danielson's LinkedIn for Beginners class at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library is the place to be on Wednesday, March 2, at 10:30 a.m. And new camera users will want to return to the library later in the month to learn from Brian Noble how to upload and download photos from their digital cameras. Both workshops are a part of the library's Next Chapter program.

In Danielson's LinkedIn class, she will give an overview about how LinkedIn can be used for business development as well as job-hunting. She will demonstrate how LinkedIn can be used to attract recruiters, potential employers or as a business tool to empower employees to generate referrals and increase sales.

Danielson's instruction will include how to use LinkedIn to boost Google juices, why and how to incorporate key words into one's profile, which settings to use to protect contacts, and how to turn a profile into a robust portfolio.

LinkedIn is a key tool for increasing one's credibility and for controlling individual discovery on the Internet. Don't miss out on this valuable opportunity to learn how to make connections that open doors for both job seekers and businesses.

No technology is easier to grasp than the point and click digital camera, but what happens after that? How do those photos get into an album, onto a computer, or shared with friends?

On Tuesday, March 23, at 10:30 a.m., Brian Noble of Noble's Camera Shop will teach a one hour introductory class on uploading and downloading pictures from the digital camera.

Bring a camera and laptop if convenient, although neither is necessary for the workshop. The library will have several laptops available for class use. By the end of the hour, all participants will understand how to upload photos from a camera to a computer or to a website and how to attach photos to email. If there's time enough, Noble will also instruct on editing techniques.

Both workshops are free and open to the public. No pre-registration is required. For more Next Chapter workshop information, visit www.cohassetlibrary.org; join the library on www.facebook.com/cohassetlibrary and follow the library on www.twitter.com/cohassetlibrary.

Cohasset Sailing Club fundraiser for new facility

They will be displaying selected items from their archives and detailed architectural plans for the new clubhouse.

As a preview of what's in the offing, visit their Facebook page to view a rendering of the new clubhouse exterior. All who are interested in learning more about this project and how they might contribute to its success are welcome to attend, but let them know you will come so they can plan accordingly. PHOTO/CRAIG GOEDECKE

A large group of Passion Plungers head out of the icy waters of Nantasket Beach during last year's annual Passion Plunge for the Special Olympics.

WHAT: The Passion Plunge helps raise money for Special Olympics Massachusetts. Last year 940 plungers jumped into the Atlantic Ocean, about half at Nantasket, raising about $400,000 or 10 percent of the annual budget. WHEN: The 13th annual Passion Plunge will be held Saturday, Feb. 26. There's a costume parade at 11:15 a.m. followed by the mad dash of the plungers into the surf at noon at the Mary Jeanette Murray Bathhouse on Nantasket Beach in Hull.

CMI presents: classic Herreshoff Pram

Build, Buy, or Build & Buy: Cohasset Maritime Institute's (CMI) boat-building program will be building a classic 10-foot Herreshoff pram this March. This is an opportunity for adults to learn traditional, handcrafted boat-building under the guidance of master boat-builder Richard Wilmore. Students will build the pram, using the original Herreshoff specifications as found in John Gardner's "Building Classic Small Craft." This is a beautifully designed, finely crafted boat that can be enjoyed now and proudly passed down to future generations. For rowing fun, getting to a mooring, or towing behind one's pleasure boat, this pram is far superior to modern dinghies and inflatable.

Cohasset Maritime Institute's (CMI) boat-building program will be building a classic 10-foot Herreshoff pram this March.

Build: The boat-building course is a 150-hour project, running four to five weeks, approximately seven hours a day, Monday through Friday, 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Students can sign up for the full 150 hours, 100 hours, 75, 50, or only 25 hours, depending on availability. For example, someone may want to participate for 50 hours in the form of seven full days or perhaps three hours a day for 17 of the 20 to 25 days. Contact: Jack Buckley at: jcbuckleyjr@gmail.com.

Cost:

$250 buys 10 hours of instructional time

$500 buys 25 hours of instructional time

$750 buys 50 hours of instructional time

$1,000 buys 100 hours of instructional time

$1,500 buys 150 hours, full time

The entire building process from lofting to finish work will be done by students. Traditional hand-crafting involves all hand-cut, hand-made pieces, fully riveted using copper rivets, with oak frames and backbone, mahogany transom, and cedar planking.

The course is scheduled to begin in mid March and finish by the end of April.

Buy: CMI is also looking for a buyer; finish work on the pram will be customized according to the Buyer's preferences. If the buyer commits early enough in the building process, the buyer can specify how it is finished.

Finished pram with one pair of 7.5-foot leather-bound oars and brass oarlocks: $6,000.

Build and Buy: This is an opportunity for someone not only to learn traditional wooden boat-building but also to build their own beautiful, classic Herreshoff pram.

Recreation numbers

Department is less than one percent of town budget

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

With the addition of a recreation assistant and an online payment system, the Cohasset Recreation is growing and expanding.

On Tuesday night, Recreation Director Ted Carroll presented his budget to the Advisory Committee.

The Fiscal 2012 budget request for the recreation department is $129,071. The budget includes the salary of the director, recreation assistant and summer pre-school and playground staff and approximately $2,700 in expenses. The remainder of the expenses associated with running the department is paid for out of a revolving fund.

The recreation department represents a miniscule part — 0.33 percent — of the overall town budget.

Almost all of the rec department's programs are self-sustaining. During the last fiscal year, which ending in June 2010, the rec department was able to return to the town $92,480.

Some changes to the department have been made to improve efficiency and expand programs. Carroll credits the addition of a 30 hour per week recreation assistant and the Cohassetrec.com website and the capability of online payments as two reasons for the growth and success of the department.

"(With the website) over $215,000 was transacted for programming, which represents more 70 percent, or 2,200 individual transactions, for the department," Carroll said. The website adds a level of convenience for both the users and the department employees.

"We're able to run more programs and expand our offerings," Carroll said. The department keeps the website constantly updated.

One of the annual popular programs is the summer playground program, which will kick off its 44th year in July.

Also, over the past year, the rec department was able to utilize the students that South Shore Vo-Tech to install a new HVAC system at the "Rec Center" (formerly known as the Garage). Carroll said the space was constantly plagued with heating and air conditioning issues that made it difficult to host programs with large groups or extreme weather.

"Now it is a fully functioning rec center," Carroll said. The project was done at no cost to the town. The students donated the labor and the material costs were raised through donations.

Other successful programs include the Health and Recreation Fair scheduled for its third annual event on Sunday, March 20 at Deer Hill School. The health department has joined with the recreation department for the fair for the first time this year.

The recreation department has also put in a $15,000 capital request to repair the cracks on the tennis courts on Bancroft Road.

"Nothing has been done there in 16 years," Carroll said.

Business development

EDC to hand over reigns of Cohasset Day

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The Economic Development Committee is taking on new challenges and focuses in the new year. Bringing more viable commercial development to town – and filling those vacant spaces in the village and on Route 3A – are primary objectives.

Tim Chamberlain, chairman of the EDC, recently gave the Selectmen an update on the work of the committee. The EDC was established several years ago as an appointed board dedicated to finding ways to promote economic development in the town.

The EDC was an active participant in the village zoning bylaw changes and was involved in the establishment of transit-oriented district where a mixed-use development (Old Colony Square) has been built.

Over the past three years the EDC has spent much of its time creating and growing the annual Cohasset Day event in September. This coming year, the reins are being handed over to the Chamber of Commerce, which has always held a partner role in the event, and a dedicated non-profit Cohasset Day organization.

Going forward, Tim Chamberlain, the new EDC chairman, told the Board of Selectmen Monday night that they want to look at how to create more commercial tax base in the town and how to do in a way that's thoughtful.

The EDC has been working over the past six months at creating a commercial real estate database and a list of commercial vacancies. Those vacancies will be posted on two international commercial real estate websites (Costar.com and Loopnet.com). Chamberlain said they expect to start uploading the vacancies to the databases next month. It's the aim the inclusion of these vacancies will give them more visibility in the commercial real estate marketplace.

"We're very excited to be almost over this hurdle," Chamberlain said.

During the process Chamberlain said the property owners have been receptive and cooperative.

"They've provided information on what vacancies they have and what rate they are looking for," Chamberlain said, adding that through this process the EDC has gained a better understanding of what the real estate marketplace is in Cohasset.

"We can now track trends going forward," Chamberlain said.

Selectmen chair Karen Quigley said this groundwork is important and as the economy improves Cohasset will be in the right spot to benefit.

The Selectmen commended the EDC's work on Cohasset Day.

The Cohasset Day event has been a huge success. It includes a classic car show, old-fashioned games, a bike parade and a tasting of local restaurants.

The proceeds from Cohasset Day allowed the event to donate $1000 each to the Cohasset Food Pantry and the Cohasset Elder Affairs.

"There has been no issues with this event whatsoever," Quigley said.

The 2011 Cohasset Day will be held on either Sunday, Sept. 18 or Sunday, Sept. 25.

Selectmen tackle big issues on Tuesday

The Board of Selectmen have scheduled two important discussions at its Tuesday, March 1 meeting. First, beginning close to 7p.m., the board will hear about the recent town audit on the management and fiscal practices of the town. At about 8:30p.m. the board will begin discussing the Bear Hill water tank easement proposed by the Water Commission. The new easement, which will be located on Reservoir Road, has been adamantly opposed by the surrounding neighborhood. The proposed access road would be sited on town land and the water commission needs permission from the Board of Selectmen to utilize the area.

The meeting will be televised on local cable station 10 for those with Comcast service.

HI-TECH LEARNING

Derby Academy tests benefits of iPads

Cohasset student put together presentation

By Glenda Garland
SPECIAL TO THE JOURNAL

When Apple Computer's iPad came out, right away educators started incorporating them into classrooms. Reports from across the country detail iPads in the hands of college students, high schoolers, middle schoolers — all the way down to kindergartners. Last fall, they also came to the eighth graders at Derby Academy.

Derby Academy didn't just jump on the iPad bandwagon because of hype, though. "You don't do something like this for the sake of doing it," said Andrea Archer, Head of School for Derby Academy, "but to make learning interesting for students. The more you can relate to them, the more effective you can be."

She found out last spring how interested some students were in the technology. "A current eighth grader came to me last year," Archer said, "and said he was using his iPad for everything. He pointed to our current laptops in science and the main building and said that if we upgrade, we should consider the iPad. I asked him to put together a presentation about it. He put together a one hour presentation — on his iPad, naturally."

That student was Tristan Roy of Cohasset. He argued that iPads would eliminate students needing to carry around heavy books, that they help students get organized because they keep everything in one place, that the iPad's free apps replace other costs, and that they provide students with instant access to material.

"He made a great case," Archer said. Still, she would not have agreed to starting a pilot program for the 2010-2011 academic year except that the Roy family volunteered to purchase one iPad for each eighth grader. That's about 42.

Archer explained that these iPads are on loan to the current class. They will have to return them at the end of the school year so they can be used for next year's eighth graders. She estimated that Derby Academy will get about three to five years of use from these units before something more advanced comes along.

Derby Academy eighth-grader, Chris Connolly, looks at his iPad while learning a lesson on multiplying binomials during his Algebra I class.

The iPads are less expensive than notebook computers, and built-in apps like a graphing calculator save individual students those costs.

Archer said that the iPad has saved time and money. The iPads are less expensive than notebook computers, and built-in apps like a graphing calculator save individual students those costs. She said teachers like the iPad most for its ability to let students do research instantly, rather than waiting for a time to become available in a computer lab.

On the educational side, she has been impressed with the way the iPad provides students with a wider palette to express their creativity. Instead of asking students to draw posters, which makes the not as artistic feel at a disadvantage, the iPad's speed of access to information lets students integrate many different types of media into their presentations and reports. "It's a different kind of creativity, but it's still creativity," she said. She also appreciates that the iPad's easy access to information gives the school a vehicle to teach critical thinking skills. "They know how to get information. We need to show them how to sift and evaluate that information."

Controlling information was not much of an issue. All students signed a secondary acceptable use policy governing how they would use the iPads, which includes who is allowed to upload what and the academic penalties for not having their iPad in class if the administration had to take it away. Archer said that three students lost their iPad privileges for a while at the beginning of the academic year, and no one has run afoul of the policy since.

There have been problems to overcome, though, and problems still remaining. Printing from the iPad is difficult, and required WiFi printers. Textbook publishers have not managed to keep up with the sudden increase in demand for interactive curriculum, so while some textbooks and workbooks are available online, some are not. Some books for literature class are unavailable in ebook format at all. But the biggest issue so far preventing teachers from integrating the iPads more into the curriculum is the continuing war between Apple and Adobe over the use of Adobe's Flash, which streams video. If a student visits a site that requires a Flash plug-in, the iPad can't display it.

Student reaction about the iPads ran to the pragmatic, both positive and negative. Thomas Kylander of Hingham said that the iPad helps in his Latin class by giving him faster access to a Latin dictionary as well as the ability to look up fables and quotes. Chris Fleming of Duxbury added that it gives him a "steadier base" from which to learn.

In algebra, where students were multiplying polynomials from a site on their iPads, Jessica Jaena of Hingham and Jacquelyn Painter of Dorchester both agreed that typing on the iPad is difficult, but that they like the easy way it gives them of communicating with their teachers. Painter added that since she got her iPad, she can use the time she spends commuting in and out of Boston to do her homework because everything is on it and it's very portable.

A student said that he cracked his iPad's screen because he had to carry it with another book. Another student said he still preferred to work on paper, rather than the iPad.

Luke Sullivan of Hingham pointed out that the iPad solves the problem of poor handwriting. He also said that by having all the problems accessible, and the answers at the bottom, students can move faster or slower through their work. "If you're getting it, you can go down into the harder questions, but if you miss one and the rest of the class moves on, you can go back to it," Sullivan said.

His algebra teacher, Kathy Conwell, agreed that the iPads made it easier for students to take the time necessary to work through problems. She likes being able to give students who are absent quicker access to the information covered in class, and hopes that the problems with Flash and textbook access will get sorted out.

"Anything new has its adventures, its ups and downs," Archer said. But overall, "It's been fun."

Freya Roberts is reflected in an iPad while looking at the SMART board that her teacher was using in her Algebra I class.

Eighth-grader Charlotte Rose is lit by the glow of her iPad while working on a binomial in her Algebra class at Derby Academy on Tuesday. All eighth graders, 42 in total, and their teachers received individual iPads to use in class in a pilot program at the school. The iPads were a gift from the Roy family.
